$50,000 Hinted Labatt Ransom; Suspect Jailed

Police Deny Knowledge of Any Transaction With Kidnapers.

Drive Launched For U. S. Gang

Victim Near Collapse, Told to Keep Quiet for 48 Hours.

Toronto, Ontario, Aug. 17 (U.P.).—John S. Labatt, wealthy Ontario brewer and Canada's first kidnap victim, was safe at home tonight with police officials professing not to know whether ransom was paid for his release.

Some sources stated with emphasis that Labatt's abductors released him on the outskirts of Toronto last night without receiving a single cent of the $150,000 demanded.

Others, including members of the Labatt family, said that the ransom, or a part of it, was paid before the brewer—his eyes covered by adhesive tape—was put out of an automobile on St. Clair avenue.

$50,000 Reported Paid.

J. C. Elliott, attorney for the Labatt family, said he understood that a portion of the money demanded had been paid, and members of the family in Hamilton, Ontario, also declared they thought the kidnapers had been given "about $50,000."

Canadian authorities, regardless of the ransom question, proceeded swiftly in their search for the abduction gang. Labatt had been back at home only a few hours before one man was in custody.

Police arrested Edward Chard, 25, of Toronto, and charged him with attempted extortion. They said he had confessed responsibility for a series of telephone calls to Hugh Labatt yesterday when the brother of the abducted brewer had been visiting in the Royal York Hotel for word from the kidnap gang. Chard, the police said, had asked for $5,000 and had designated the Humber bridge, near Toronto, for a rendezvous.

Labatt Near Collapse.

Meanwhile, Labatt was under the care of a physician at the home of Hugh Labatt in London. He was near collapse from his experience and his doctor ordered that he refrain from issuing any statement for 48 hours.

Police conferred at the Labatt house, however, and it was assumed the victim furnished them with all possible details to facilitate the search for the gang.

It was understood that Labatt said he was seized by two men last Tues-

Alaska Fliers Hop for U. S.

Army Planes to Seattle on First Leg of Trip to Washington.

Seattle, Aug. 17 (A.P.).—Completing a nonstop formation flight of 720 miles from Juneau, Alaska, ten great United States Army bombers arrived here at 5:55 p. m., Pacific standard time, today.

Juneau, Alaska, Aug. 17 (A.P.).—A squadron of Army air bombers completed its photographic survey of Alaska today and hopped for Seattle at 3:14 p. m. (E. S. T.), the ten ships leaving in formation for a nonstop flight.

The big bombers, under command of Col. Henry Arnold, waited several hours before fog in the region of Seattle was reported lifting, then started their 725-mile flight.

From Seattle they will fly to Washington, D. C. The route will not be announced until they reach the Puget Sound city.

In conjunction with a flight of Navy seaplanes and a flotilla of American submarines, the bombers flew over Alaska on what the War Department declared to be an "observation and photographic mission."

Alaskans hailed their coming as answer to pleas the United States should establish naval and air bases in Alaska, and afford fortification for the Aleutian Islands, which stretch from Alaska toward the coasts of Japan and Siberia.

In a short time the treaty between Japan and the United States, whereby America agreed not to fortify her Northwest possessions, will expire.

The Army-Navy expeditions were almost simultaneous with an unconfirmed report that Japan intended to establish a $10,000,000 "fishing base" on the Kurile Islands.

The letter threatened to blow up the temple if the money were not forthcoming, police said.

The letter was received by Rheba Crawford Splivalo, director of the College Degree Rule May Oust Bentley Aids

30 in Juvenile Court Face Loss of Jobs by New Order.

Thirty employes of the Juvenile Court face the loss of their jobs as the result of a decision by Judge Fay Bentley that all of the employes must be college graduates and must pass an examination. The rule will be put into effect on or about September 1.

The examination, which will be supervised by a board whose members have been selected by Judge Bentley, is expected to "weed out" a score or more of persons who have been working with the last four judges of the court.

Miss Bentley, recently appointed, has notified court members that they must submit to an examination to determine their fitness to continue in juvenile work. The requirement of a college degree will eliminate all but three or four of the employes unless it is revoked.

Judge Bentley is known to favor college graduates because of their advanced learning in social welfare. She has indicated that even the most proficient employes of the court must take the examination or else be discharged from their positions.

Employes will be given three weeks' notice before the examination, Miss Bentley states. The examinations will be given by the Civil Service, though the positions are appointive and are not subject to examination. Most of the employes are said to have been appointed through political pressure, or because of friendship with former judges of the court.

It also was learned that Miss Bentley has an elaborate plan to extend the jurisdiction of the Juvenile Court. It was said she will

Foreign Foe Perils Reich, Says Hitler

Chancellor Urges Unity in Vigorous Campaign for "Faith Vote."

Lauds Von Hindenburg, Whose Duties He Seeks in Poll.

Hamburg, Germany, Aug. 17 (A.P.). Adolf Hitler pleaded earnestly with all Germany tonight to approve his succession to the powers of Reichspresident Von Hindenburg, an action he asserted made necessary by a foreign hostility toward Germany and economic distress at home.

He made no effort to cover up the present economic difficulties of the Reich, but on the other hand referred to them as conditions calling for a strong central government.

The chancellor declared that he would have preferred to appeal to the people first and then carried out their decision, but that the leaderless weeks which would have intervened would have proved costly to Germany.

Sees New Intrigue.

Hitler referred to the possibility that some foreign circles which predicted trouble after the death of Von Hindenburg cherished the thought that there would be confusion "here and abroad" and the already existing "international uncertainties" would be added to by new intrigues.

His address in this hard-hit seaport was the climax of a whirlwind campaign which will culminate Sunday in the plebiscite on one question—whether the Germans sanction Hitler's assumption of presidential powers.

The vigor of the campaign—its hundreds of speeches by lesser Nazis, testimonials by leaders in every sphere of activity and slogans and appeals to every possible medium—and the seriousness of the Fuehrer tonight—made it evident that the Nazis are fighting firmly for a vote so large and so favorable that the future course of the regime can not be questioned.

Many of Hitler's arguments were the stock pronouncements of Nazi orators, but with apparent sincerity he declared that his course was prescribed by unfriendliness abroad and condemned post-war political disunity.

Emphasizes Unity.

He emphasized again and again that only a centralized government can cope with the problems of finance, religion and politics.

He renewed his fight for unity—the crux of the campaign—and declared, "Today this fight has led to a success which history sometime will describe as the turning point; my ideas proved to be correct."

His forecast of the future was somewhat enigmatic.

"While I do not want to forestall in the future a definite form of constitution for the Reich," he said, "I believe I shall succeed in adding in the future a new honor to the title of German chancellor."

His reference perhaps was to the Weimar constitution which, although battered, still stands in theory.

He had earlier referred to the constitution when he said "I must

Stratosphere Hop To Start At Dawn

Two Belgians Ready for Take-Off Today.

Hour-Havenne, Belgium, Aug. 17 (A.P.).—Two young Belgian aero-scientists arrived here tonight and began assembling their equipment for a flight into the stratosphere at dawn.

Despite a stiff northwest wind which was whipping the Ardennes hills, the stratospherists—Max Cosyns and Neree Vanderelst—had favorable weather reports for their venture.

Spurred by the opportunity to witness the start of the first stratosphere flight from this section, and rumor that King Leopold might come here to witness it, large crowds of spectators were gathered.

Sellers in Gas War Facing Monthly Loss of $450,000

Washington gasoline distributors were losing money at the rate of approximately $450,000 a month last night at the end of the third day of the District's price war.

Basing his calculations on the average number of gallons on which tax is paid in the District each month—about 9,000,000—and the approximate per-gallon-revenue loss incurred by Wednesday's 4.8-cent price cut, this was the estimate of the cost of the Capital's latest gas price war given by an official of one of the distributing companies.

This official, who requested that his name be withheld, declared that the bulk of the loss is being taken by distributors because of their practice of guaranteeing dealers a fixed margin of profit regardless of the posted retail price.

Meanwhile, Washington motorists continued to profit, retail prices generally remaining at the lowest point in a year—9 cents, plus 3 cents District and Federal tax. At three of the city's independent stations prices were even lower—10 cents, including tax, at Florida avenue stations in the northeast and northwest sections of the city, and 11 cents, including tax, at a Wisconsin avenue retailer.

All the major oil companies and most of the so-called independent dealers were posting a price of 9 cents plus tax. This was within 2 cents of the lowest general price reached during a similar price war a year ago.

How long the war with its accompanying low prices was to continue, oil company officials on both sides — independents and major companies—were unable to estimate. The independents, who began the price cutting in protest to alleged discounting to preferred customers by the larger companies, were expected to hold a meeting today or tomorrow from which a new price understanding may come.

It was reported on both sides that the new low prices, ranging from 10 to 15 cents, tax included, depending upon grade, have failed to stimulate sales.

Lieut. Col. Sultan Gets D. C. Commission Post

Gotwals' Successor in $9,000 Engineer Job Holds D. S. M.

By Edward T. Folliard.

Lieut. Col. Daniel I. Sultan has been selected by President Roosevelt as Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia, it was announced at the White House late yesterday.

He will succeed Maj. John C. Gotwals, whose four-year term expired while President Roosevelt was on his Hawaiian cruise.

Col. Sultan, an outstanding officer in the Army Engineer Corps, was a dark horse in the contest for Maj. Gotwals' job. At least, he was so regarded by high-ranking officials of the War Department. The leading candidate, in their opinion, was Maj. Brehon B. Somervell.

When Col. Sultan, now on an inspection tour in Texas, takes the oath of office, the City of Washington will have two Commissioners who were born in Mississippi.

Commissioner George E. Allen, a native of Mississippi, was sponsored by Pat Harrison, senior United States Senator from that State. It was assumed that Harrison also had backed Col. Sultan, but the latter's friends last night denied that this was the case.

Maj. Somervell, who was born in Arkansas, but who spent much of his youth in this city, was backed for Engineer Commissioner by Senator Joseph T. Robinson, of Arkansas, the Democratic leader of the Senate.

Col. Sultan was born in the town of Oxford, Miss., December 9, 1885. He entered the United States Military Academy, June 15, 1903, and Politics Ban Emphasized By Roosevelt

President Expects Workers Hoover 'Blanketed' to Take Fitness Tests.

(Associated Press.)

President Roosevelt reiterated yesterday that he expected Federal workers to keep out of politics and at the same time said he expected the civil service to be strengthened by orders requiring employes blanketed in under previous Administrations to take competitive examinations.

In this connection the Johnson City (Tenn.) Soldiers' Home incident was recalled.

About 500 under civil service were required to take examinations for their jobs there, officials said. The Administration was severely criticized on the ground that the order afforded job-hungry Democrats a chance to get positions.

But the Administration position was that the persons affected had been put under the civil service without examination in the first place and that the new regulations righted an injustice by requiring them to prove their fitness.

Aimed at Hoover Protection.

Since the Democrats came into power, some party leaders have claimed that the Hoover Administration before going out protected Republican appointees by orders bringing them within the civil service.

A Congressional committee went into the situation at the Treasury Department. The claim was made that Secretary Morgenthau added around 1,000 former prohibition agents who were Republicans.

The Secretary replied that he needed men to enforce internal revenue liquor laws and took them off the civil service list.

The result was an amendment to the deficiency bill, which was intended to remove virtually all former Prohibition Service employes who were dropped and reinstated after June 10, 1933.

No decision has been made as to how many employes are affected by the amendment.

No More Tests Likely.

Officials said other instances where workers blanketed in during the Hoover Administration were required to take competitive examination included 200 to 300 at the Commerce Department and about 16 at the Labor Department.

It was said that no further similar orders were in prospect, so far as was known.

The President yesterday emphatically said he opposed political activities by Government workers or politics playing a part in their selection.

He started a reform movement several months ago by frowning on the practice by some party leaders, of representing clients before Government departments.

Several Already Out.

Mr. Roosevelt favored passage of an amendment to a Home Owners Loan Corporation bill which would have stated specifically that politics was to play no part in the selection of the corporation's employes. Senator Norris (Republican), Nebraska, introduced the amendment, but the Democrats in the House refused to accept it.

Just this week Mr. Roosevelt gave complete authority to the Federal Emergency Relief Administration to dismiss any employes running for political office or engaging in the political campaigns.

The President also has required that members of the Democratic National committee make a choice between continuing their offices and accepting Federal appointment.

Secretary Morgenthau has been busy checking over political activity by Internal Revenue and other department officers throughout the country. Several resignations either from jobs or political posts have resulted.

Tammanyites Charge Farley Ouster Plot

House Delegation Says "New Dealers" Are Out for Its Seats.

(Copyright, 1934, by The Associated Press.)

Members of the big Tammany House delegation yesterday charged the Administration was attemping to unseat them with so-called Roosevelt recovery party candidates in the Democratic primaries September 13 in New York.

As spokesman for a group, Representative Martin J. Kennedy (Democrat), New York, asserted that, in order to help some "recovery" candidates, Postmaster General Farley, with President Roosevelt's approval, was permitting either the candidates or their advocates to handle Federal patronage in Manhattan.

All New York candidates for Congress must file petitions signed by at least 500 voters by August 21. Kennedy declared that on that date it will be learned how many Tammany Representatives would have opposition from "recovery" aspirants, indications being there would be quite a number.

For some time there have been reports that the Administration might seek to replace with "New Dealers" some of the old-time Tammany Representatives friendly to John F. Curry, deposed boss.

Officials of the National Democratic organization, however, denied the reports, claiming the matter of candidates in New York City was being left to James J. Dooling, new Tammany chieftain, and his district leaders.

The President also has said emphatically he was not interfering in primary contests in the States and Postmaster General Farley has issued statements saying the Democratic National Committee has not taken sides in primaries.

"Although the President has said he is not interfering in intra-party contests in the States," Kennedy said, "my opponent in the Eighteenth District—James Murray—claims he is the Administration candidate and has been handling Federal patronage in the district. Similar situations, I understand, prevail in other districts.

"I was one of the few Representatives who voted to sustain President Roosevelt's veto of the independent offices-veterans' relief bill. It was my single vote that

Miss Whitney Indicted In Communist Perjury

San Francisco, Aug. 17 (A.P.).—Miss Charlotte Anita Whitney, niece of a former justice of the United States Supreme Court, and seven others were indicted by the county grand jury today on charges of perjury.

The indictments alleged false verification of signatures on a petition placing the Communist party on the ballot in San Francisco.

Long Forces Measures for Military Rule

Legislature Expected to Indorse 'Kingfish' in Short Order.

Bills Will Include State Police and Transfer of Vote Control.

Baton Rouge, La., Aug. 17 (A.P.).—Senator Huey P. Long's legislative supporters, after indorsing a resolution calling for a sweeping investigation of Long's New Orleans political enemies, combined efforts tonight to pass by sunrise tomorrow bills his opponents contend will give the bos of Louisiana "more power than one man should have."

Voting final approval of a legislative inquiry into New Orleans municipal and parish offices of the old regular city political organization, the Senate cleared the way through suspension of rules for final consideration of the Long bills at a post-midnight meeting.

Create State Police.

The bills, including measures establishing a State consetabulary, giving the Governor unlimited powers to use the militia and grant clemency, broadening the State administration's election authority, and striking in several ways at the election strength of the New Orleans regular faction, were advanced at rapid pace through the Senate finance committee and then moved through to third reading at an afternoon Senate meeting.

There was no checking the progress of the measures, even though an attack on one bill, which Long said would put an end to lotteries in New Orleans, was made by one of his own followers in committee and the regular floor leader in the Senate.

Lottery Evil Scored.

Denouncing what he said were many lotteries in New Orleans that "took beans out of hungry mouths," Long ran into opposition on the lottery bill from Senator R. A. Wingrave, one of his New Orleans supporters.

Wingrave said a penalty of from two to three years in the penitentiary was too steep, and that the bill would interfere with church drawings.

"Three years! Can you imagine that!" Wingrave asserted. "Just for taking a chance on a car in a church drawing!"

Long said that "any church that couldn't exist without a lottery had got itself into a bad fix."

Early City Probe Seen.

The New Orleans investigation resolution, passed by the House 37 to 33, went through the Senate 23 to 12. Present expectation among legislators is that the investigation will begin immediately. After the Senate's action, Senator Long said he "didn't know" whether it would start Monday.

Jovialty marked the speedy approval of bills by the Senate committee, with even the two opposition members, E. C. Brodtmann and Joseph Bistes, joining in the festival.

Long came into the committee room followed by Jose Messina, who escorts him nearly everywhere, with a broad smile on his face.

Grabbing up a bill, Long would announce "Senator Wingate offers his amendment." Senator Wingate would nod his head solemnly.

Bill for Pure Elections.

Long offered a bill to "guarantee the purity of election."

"This bill will fix it so we can be sure there will not be any more ballot-box stealing. It conforms to the ideas of the Honest Election League in New Orleans," said Long.

"Then Honest Election League?" interrupted Senator Wingate, ardent Long follower from New Orleans. "I'm ag'in it!"

He voted against it as the gathering rocked with laughter.

Once Richard Leche, secretary to the Governor, jocularly announced: "Senator Wingate offers another amendment."

"Wait a minute," Senator Brodtmann broke in, good naturedly. "What is this? Here we have the Governor's secretary speaking for a member of the committee. Just who's on this committee, anyhow?"

Chairman Dore cut in:

"Do I hear any objections to the amendments?"

Waiting for no answer, he hurreid

He was Donald Campbell, 30-year-old Columbus truck driver, victim of a "talking" encephalitis.

Boy Kills Self After His First Liquor Drinks

Tidal Basin Searched for Body of Man; Dead Woman Identified.

The death of James D. Poindexter, 14, who was found hanging in a rooming house after he is reported to have taken his first drink of alcoholic liquor, was being investigated last night by Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald as Harbor police dragged the waters near the Tidal Basin floodgate for the body of a man believed to be a suicide.

The Poindexter boy, who lived in Richmond, but who was staying temporarily with his father in the 200 block of G street northwest, was found hanging from a chandelier with a clothesline looped around his neck. His cousin, Victor T. Poindexter, 30, of the same address, found the body.

After Patrolman John A. Burgess, of the First Precinct, had received information that the boy had taken several drinks with companions, Dr. MacDonald ordered an autopsy to learn the cause of death. A half pint of liquor was missing from the room, police said.

The search at the floodgate was started when a hat and coat, containing a farewell note, was found on the sea wall. The note was addressed "Dear Marie," and read: "I am sorry you left home. I am leaving town. You will take care of Bill. I have nothing against you. Wish you all the luck in the world. Bye, bye." It was signed by William Slingland, of the 200 block of C street northwest. Slingland had reported his wife missing Thursday night. He told police she had disappeared with a large sum of money.

The body of the woman who leaped to her death in the Anacostia River on Wednesday was identified yesterday by her mother as Mrs. Frances Allen, 31 years old, of 613 Elliott street northeast. "She is my daughter," said Mrs. Purtill Podgeon, of the 400 block of M street northwest, "as she viewed the body at the morgue. "She talked Big Majority Decrees Support of Cotton Group by Allies.

Green Promises Federation Help

Roosevelt Alone Able to Avert Walkout, Says McMahon.

New York, Aug. 17 (A.P.).—Strikes involving 325,000 additional workers were voted tonight in the woolen and worsted, silk, rayon and synthetic rayon knitters industries by the convention of the United Textile Workers of America. The convention yesterday voted a strike in the cotton textile industry, which employs 500,000 workers.

The votes to call out workers allied with the cotton textile industry were by a large majority, but not unanimous.

The silk and rayon delegates left to the discretion of the new executive committee of the United Textile Workers of America and the executive committees of their own branches the time the strikes are to be called.

Woolen and worsted and synthetic rayon workers, however, decided to go out at the same time as the cotton textile employes. The convention had voted to call the cotton textile strike at 12 hours' notice on or before September 1.

Silk Conditions Played.

Russel Wood, president of the Silk Workers' Federation, said there were 125,000 workers in that industry, although not all are members of the union.

"Conditions in the silk and rayon industry are the same as those in the cotton industry," said Frank Schweitzer, of Paterson, N. J., who introduced the silk and rayon resolution.

"Since the advent of the NRA, the silk industry has been in worse condition than it ever was before."

Representatives at the convention said there are 150,000 workers employed in the woolen and worsted industry, and 50,000 in the synthetic rayon. All of the workers, however, are not members of the unions.

No estimates were available tonight as to the percentage of workers affiliated with the groups which voted the strikes.

Urges Complete Paralysis.

Before the vote on the silk and rayon resolution was taken Wood informed the convention the workers would walk out voluntarily in sympathy with the cotton workers if the strike was not called.

William G. Batty, of New Bedford, Mass., argued that if the strike were to be successful the paralysis must be made as complete as possible.

Emil Riede, of Milwaukee, led the opposition to the resolution and asserted "we ought to bite off just as much as we can chew and not be swayed by enthusiasm for a general strike."

President Thomas F. McMahon, of the United organization, said he expected the executive board of each division to convene upon the matter before the convention adjourns.

Prior to the night meeting, a telegram was sent to William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, asking help in the Nation-wide cotton textile strike.

At Atlantic City Green promised the Federation's support.

"We will cooperate," Green said, "in every way we can."

Roosevelt Held Only Hope.

McMahon, who was reelected president today, declared that only President Roosevelt can avert a cotton textile strike.

"President Roosevelt is the only person in God's green world who can stop the general strike," he asserted.

"Under the mandate of the convention yesterday there is no doubt of the strike being called unless the President forces the leaders of the textile industry to sit down at the conference table with representatives of the United Textile Workers."

He added that NRA Adminis-

Cagney, Movie 'Tough Guy,' Denies Donating to 'Reds'

Sacramento, Calif., Aug. 17 (U.P.). Letters made public by police today referred to "Jimmy Cagney" as a Communist sympathizer and a contributor of sums to aid radical suspects held for trial.

The letters were seized when Miss Caroline Decker, blonde organizer for the Cannery and Agricultural Workers Industrial Union, and leader of several agricultural strikes, was rearrested on a vagrancy charge.

The letter referred to "Cagney" and "Jimmy Cagney" and indicated, police said, he was the moving picture actor of that name.

Cagney, the actor, is well known for his liberal opinions. He advocates release of Tom Mooney, San Francisco Preparedness Day parade bomber, and once visited Mooney in his San Quentin cell.

Hollywood, Aug. 17 (A.P.).—James Cagney, red-haired movie actor, today denied he had given financial support to Communists.

He said he hardly could believe Ella Winters, wife of Lincoln Steffens, writer and lecturer, was author of the letter Sacramento police said she wrote linking his name with purported financial backing of radicals. If Miss Winters did write the letter, Cagney said, she "had no right to do so."

The actor said he had visited Steffens and his wife at Carmel many times, but never had given or offered money to the cause of Communism.

10,000,000 Out In First Issue Silver Notes

Eighth of Total Issue Now Being Printed Is Put in Circulation.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

In the first week after President Roosevelt's order nationalizing silver and providing for issuance of silver certificates, the Treasury issued $10,642,722 in new silver certificates—part of an $80,000,000 certificate issue now being printed.

Meanwhile Treasury accountants chalked up for the Government a seigniorage, or profit, of $18,325,740 on silver bullion against which the certificates are being issued. This sum represents the difference between the actual cost of the silver and $1.29 an ounce, the monetary value of the metal.

The $18,325,740 marked down in the Treasury's daily statement as a receipt from seigniorage was greater than the income this month either from income taxes or customs. Income tax collections for the month totaled $11,104,456, and customs receipts were $10,215,359 up to the close of business on Wednesday.

When the silver nationalization order was issued the Treasury had outstanding silver certificates totaling $495,301,989, and to the close of business on Wednesday silver certificates outstanding were recorded at $505,944,711. In addition, the bullion holdings of the Treasury mints increased from $5,148,700 when the "nationalization" order was issued to $24,915,518. Virtually all the silver certificates issued prior to a week ago were supported by silver dollars held by the mints.

New Certificates Out.

The basis for the new silver certificates will be held in bullion rather than coined into silver dollars. The new $1 silver certificates are now making their appearance in Washington. They are different in several respects from the old certificates, bearing the imprint of a figure "1" on their face as well as the word spelled out. The redemption notation reads: "One dollar in silver payable to the bearer on demand," whereas the old silver certificates promised "one silver dollar payable to the bearer on demand."

Within a few days Washingtonians will be able to obtain the new $5, $10 and $20—and those very prosperous the $100—silver certificates now being engraved. These bills will represent a new addition to the country's paper money.

With the approval of President Roosevelt, Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau yesterday published silver regulations governing the delivery of silver to the Government mints and assay offices under the August nationalization order.

Beyond making specific many of the requirements of the silver order, the regulations contained no new provisions. They provided that all silver subject to the nationalization must be delivered to the Government by November 7 and that all holders of silver subject to the order who have not made delivery by September 1 must file a report describing their holdings not later than September 15.

License Deadline Sept. 15.

Persons wishing to withhold "nationalized silver" for industrial uses, re-export or for other reasons regarded as valid under the terms of the Executive order must apply for licenses to do so by September 15. The embargo on silver export, ordered July 5, is reenacted in substance by the new regulations.

Meanwhile, Senator Thomas P. Gore (Democrat, of Oklahoma, one of the orthodox money group in the Senate, applauded the Treasury's decision to issue silver certificates only to the amount of the cost of silver acquired since June 14. Certificates on the basis of $1.29 an ounce are being issued against all silver in the Treasury on that date.

Senator Gore's attitude is in contrast to that of his colleague, Senator Elmer Thomas (Democrat, of Oklahoma, leader of the Senate inflation bloc, who wants the Treasury to issue certificates against all silver now being acquired. But Senator Gore contended that to do that would be to issue "fiat money" and he added that "perhaps I have less faith in money magic than it deserves."

"To me," he said, "the science of money is largely a science of illusions. And I am not an illusionist. Of all forms of monomania, I sometimes think that moneymania is the worst."

New AAA Shift Plan Given Up

Night Force Loses Chance to Alternate With Day Staff.

Hundreds of employes of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, who have been working nights because there is insufficient office space for everybody to work days, were disappointed yesterday when they were informed that alternate night and day shifts would not be ordered.

Recently the night employes, most of whom work from 4:30 p. m. until midnight, were given questionnaires on which they were asked whether they would prefer to work nights during one month and days the next, alternating with day employes. Nearly all the night employes expressed positive desires to work days during alternate months.

Attached to the questionnaire was a statement that if sufficient reasons were shown why the work should be alternated the new system would become effective August 20.

Yesterday they were told the plan was off and they would continue to work nights indefinitely.

D. C. Engineer Post Awarded To D. I. Sultan

Successor to Gotwals in $9,000 Commission Job Holds D. S. M.

upon his graduation was assigned to the Engineer Corps as a second lieutenant.

Among his achievements was a survey in connection with the proposed canal across Nicaragua, and his "clean-up" of CWA graft in Chicago. This crusade he carried out while serving as Civil Works Administrator of Cook County, Ill.

As Engineer Commissioner, Col. Sultan will hold down what is regarded as the prize post that may go to an active Army officer. He will be paid $9,000 a year, which is more than is received by the Chief of the Engineer Corps. Also, he will be provided with an automobile and a chauffeur.

Now on Texas Project.

At present, Col. Sultan is in Texas in connection with a river and harbor project.

His appointment as Engineer Commissioner involves no such problem as moving, inasmuch as his family already occupies a house here at 2036 O street northwest.

During the World War Col. Sultan was a member of the War Department General Staff. For services in that capacity he was awarded the Distinguished Service Medal, the citation for which reads as follows:

"As chief of the personnel section in the office of the executive assistant to the Chief of Staff of the Army during the war and the demobilization, he formulated policies covering commissioned personnel and handled with marked ability many complex questions of grave importance to the War Department and to the entire Army.

Vision, Foresight Cited.

"His work was characterized by conspicuous breadth of vision and keen foresight. His splendid judgment and the sound policies initiated by him contributed in a large measure to the successful handling of the commissioned personnel of the Army. He rendered service of signal worth to the Government in a position of great responsibility."

Col. Sultan was in Nicaragua from August, 1929, until July, 1931.

For his services there he was awarded the Oak Leaf Cluster, representing the second award of the Distinguished Service Medal. The citation said:

"For exceptionally meritorious and distinguished services. While serving as commanding officer of the United States Army troops in Nicaragua, Col. Sultan conducted an investigation of the interoceanic canal route with efficiency and maintained high morale among his troops under conditions of unusual hardship and difficulty.

"By his tact and diplomacy in handling intricate problems he maintained cordial relations with the people of Nicaragua. Following the disastrous earthquake in Nicaragua, March, 1931, Col. Sultan, by his prompt and effective relief work, evoked the appreciation and gratitude of the afflicted people. In the performance of these duties, he demonstrated marked ability, sound judgment and untiring zeal in a position of great responsibility, thereby rendering services of great value to his Government."

With Canal Board.

Upon his return from Nicaragua, Col. Sultan was on duty here with the Interoceanic Canal Board in the office of the Chief of Engineers.

In January, 1932, he was assigned as district engineer in the Chicago (Ill.) area, and later was named civil works administrator for Chicago.

Col. Sultan is an honor graduate of the Command and General Staff School, Leavenworth, Kans., and a graduate of the Army War College in this city.

He has served as engineer officer at Savannah, Ga.; has worked on fortifications in the Philippine Islands, on locks and dams in the Ohio River, and has been an instructor in engineering at West Point and at Fort Humphreys, Va.

prevented the House from adopting the Senate veterans' proposals opposed by President Roosevelt, yet the Administration is supporting my opponent who claims to be running on a New Deal platform. It appears to me that the Administration should stand by the members who stood by it."

Failure Is Predicted.

Kennedy also said Postmaster General Farley tried to force Senator Copeland (Democrat), New York, out of the race for renomination, but added that in this the Democratic leader had been defeated, and that he felt attempts to unseat Tammany delegation members would fail, too.

Kennedy said James J. Hoey, Roosevelt-appointed collector of internal revenue, and Murray had taken over the reins of the recovery party since the defeat of Joseph B. McKee by Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia, Republican Independent. Apparently, he said, they had Administration support.

"Despite Secretary Morgenthau's ruling that employes under the Treasury Department shall not take part in political campaigns," Kennedy said, "Jim Hoey and some of his employes are doing it. Three of Hoey's men have been knocking on doors in my district to get signatures on the Murray petition. I went to Murray the other day and told him that unless they stopped I would be compelled to call it to the attention of the Treasury Department."

Danville Marks Time on Strike

Awaits Word of Delegate on Textile Decree.

Danville, Va., Aug. 17 (AP).—Danville's participation in a National textile strike will depend entirely on what C. W. Bolick, representative of the local union at the New York convention, has to say when he comes back, Mrs. Roxie Dodson, president of the United Textile Workers of America local, said today.

She added that she did not know if he voted for or against the strike call. If the call comes, she said she believes it will be obeyed. She declined to give the number of union members in the Dan River Mills, but said organization work has been progressing satisfactorily.

Police Probe Attempt On Life of Jack La Rue

Hollywood, Aug. 17 (AP).—Police today investigated what Jack La Rue, film actor, said he believed might have been an attempt on his life.

Officers said some one smashed a window in the actor's bedroom in the night with a 4-foot length of heavy timber and flailed it up and down.

La Rue said his bed was directly under the window until recently.

July Industry Job Decrease Near Record

Month Has One of Biggest Declines in 15 Years, Perkins Reports.

Industrial employment in July made one of the sharpest declines in the last 15 years, Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins announced yesterday, with a reduction of 359,000 workers and $10,460,000 in wages under June.

Labor disturbances, the drought and extreme heat, and seasonal factors contributed to the decline, she said. Factory employment decreased 3 per cent, and pay rolls fell 6.8 per cent.

This monthly drop, contrasted with a gain in employment of 6.9 per cent July, 1933, over the preceding month.

"July is normally a month of declining employment and pay rolls," Miss Perkins said. "Employment decreases have been recorded in 12 and pay roll drops in 13 of the preceding 15 years for which data are available."

The woman member of President Roosevelt's Cabinet said she saw no significance in the fact that last month's decreases was exceeded by only two other Julys during the 15 years. These were in 1930 and 1932. The 1934 decline was equaled in 1924.

Gains in Other Years.

July gains in employment were recorded in 1919, 1929 and 1933, the latter being far the greatest.

Isador Lubin, commissioner of labor statistics, said the retail trade industry has suffered most in the drought area and that the effect of strikes and the drought were reflected in the business of mail-order houses.

The most pronounced declines in employment and pay rolls among manufacturing groups were reported for the iron and steel industries. Each of the 13 industries in this group, with the exception of the tin can industry, reported losses, the largest percentage decrease being shown by the hardware industry.

Declines were sharper for the durable goods group of manufacturing industries than for the nondurable group.

The automobile industry reported a loss of 7.8 per cent in employment, and slightly larger declines were recorded in shipbuilding and aircraft.

The textile industry, now scheduled for a general strike, showed a falling off of 5.5 per cent in employment from June to July, sharp seasonal declines appearing in millinery, women's clothing and shirts and collars.

Gains of more than 4 per cent in both employment and wages were reported by the food groups, largely because of seasonal rises in canning, ice cream manufacturing and beverages.

1,300,000 More Employed.

Despite the heavy slump, Miss Perkins said, 1,300,000 more workers were employed in July this year than in July, 1933, and total weekly wages were $41,000,000 greater.

Similarly, there were 2,560,000 more workers in private industry last month than in March, 1933, when President Roosevelt took office. Pay rolls have risen by $72,800,000 within that period.

Offsetting this loss of employment in private industry has been a steady increase in governmental jobs.

More than 625,000 persons were directly employed on PWA construction projects July 15, an increase of 35,000 over June.

The emergency work program of the FERA added 200,000 workers for a total of 1,200,000.

The Civilian Conservation Corps added 100,000 youths, to attain a total of 300,000, while construction projects financed by the RFC gave employment to 19,000.

State governments employed nearly 214,000 on road work.

Private industrial employment in the District fell off 2.4 per cent, while governmental pay rolls mounted.

Sen. Byrd Pushes Skyline Highway

Senator Byrd, of Virginia, was told yesterday by Thomas H. MacDonald, public roads bureau chief, that there is little hope of opening more of Skyline drive this fall than the short distance between Panorama and Skyland, the Associated Press reported.

Skyline drive is the broad highway through Shenandoah National Park. It will connect at its southern tip with the parkway linking the Virginia recreational center with Great Smoky Mountains National Park in North Carolina and Tennessee.

Senator Byrd urged on President Roosevelt Wednesday the early opening of the drive and also dispatched similar requests to Mr. MacDonald and A. E. Demaray, acting parks director.

East's Best Folk Fiddlers Compete on Virginia Peak

White Top Mountain, Va., Aug. 17 (AP).—Old White Top, one of the highest peaks east of the Rockies, was the scene of merriment today as hundreds gathered for the Virginia Folk Music Festival that has become Nationally known.

From the mountains of Pennsylvania fiddlers, some of them 80 to 90 years old, arrived to test their skill and artistry against that of mountaineers from the hills of Virginia and North Carolina, and David Orebaugh was here from Rockingham County, Va., with his noted jew's-harp.

White Top winners from southwest Virginia and Tennessee were present with their "Billy in the Low Ground," "Devil in the Woodpile" and "Lady of the Lake" against the Pennsylvanians' "Speed the Plough," "On the Road to Lancaster" and other traditional tunes.

Also on hand for the two-day festival were winners of the Massanetta and Patrick County, Va., festivals and others heard at the recent broadcast from the White House sponsored by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Lady Nancy Astor, Virginia-born member of the British Parliament, sent a message for the festival and folk conference. Of especial interest to her are the tunes to be played by J. B. Chisholm, champion fiddler of Albemarle County, Lady Astor's former home.

From the University of Florida came Prof. Alton C. Morris, who has just sent to the Journal of American Folk Lore the first version of the ballad "Lord Derwentwater" ever recovered from oral tradition in America.

Move Begun To Make All Codes Agree

Johnson to Confer With Gov. Moore of N. J. in Next Week.

A campaign to make State and National NRA codes conform was initiated yesterday when Gen. Hugh S. Johnson decided to confer in a few days with Gov. A. Harry Moore of New Jersey. The movement was precipitated when Richard Ulran, a small Jersey City barber, complained to the recovery chief that the code was ruining his business by compelling him to increase his rates of 25 cents for a hair cut and 15 cents for a shave to 50 and 25 cents.

Ulran addressed his protest against the State pact to Gen. Johnson as a last resort. He objected that his only alternatives were to "either go voluntarily out of business and face starvation * * * or I am forced out of business and jailed."

Observers recalled it also was the State code which several months ago culminated in imprisonment of Jacob Maged, a Jersey City tailor, for charging 5 cents, too little for pressing a suit.

Barber shops were among the service codes whose price-fixing provisions were suspended in May by President Roosevelt. Gen. Johnson, it was learned, would like to obtain similar action by New Jersey. "The NRA," Gen. Johnson wrote Gov. Moore, "has reached the conclusion that if the maximum benefit is to be derived from both Federal and State recovery programs, State codes should be identical in their provisions with Federal codes."

Gen. Johnson revealed that he had invited Gov. Moore to come to Washington for a talk on the problem before he leaves next Wednesday for a two-week vacation at Atlantic Coast resorts.

Utah officials already have agreed to revise their recovery code in line with the National act. Similar concessions will be sought in the field by R. S. Beach, a deputy administrator. States with separate recovery codes in addition to New Jersey and Utah include California, Ohio and Wisconsin. States providing penalties for an intrastate violation are Colorado, Illinois, New Mexico, New York, South Carolina, Virginia, Washington, West Virginia and Wyoming. Among States described as possessing legislation supplemental to NRA are Massachusetts, Kansas, Mississippi, Oregon and Texas.

New Plan Gives Jobs to 60,000

Mattress Making Also Will Reduce Surplus of U. S. Cotton.

Work relief for more than 60,000 women now on direct Federal aid rolls and a reduction of 250,000 bales in the cotton surplus will be provided in a program of mattress manufacturing just inaugurated, Aubrey Williams, acting Federal Relief Administrator, announced yesterday.

With every State and the District Relief Administration cooperating in the undertaking, 410 manufacturing units are now ready for operation and 233 more are being set up.

It is estimated that each unit will provide employment for 26 persons and create 16,718 full-time jobs. The mattresses will be distributed among the needy.

The District Relief Administration has been assigned 300 bales of cotton and 28,500 yards of ticking for its program.

New Body Acts To Unify Relief

Emergency Committee to Adjust Wage Scales as First Move.

The newly created Emergency Industrial committee yesterday took up the task of coordinating the far-flung recovery and relief projects designed to put industry back on its feet.

The committee, headed by Donald Richberg, chairman of the National Emergency Council, met in the office of Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins. Attending were Recovery Administrator Hugh S. Johnson, Acting Federal Relief Administrator Aubrey Williams, and Harry Slattery, personal assistant to Secretary of Interior Harold L. Ickes.

Miss Perkins said the committee may ultimately consider many problems of jurisdictional conflict which have arisen under the New Deal setup, such as that between the NRA and the Federal Trade Commission.

Its immediate task, however, will be to iron out such inconsistencies as varying wage scales on three Northwestern dams being built under three Federal agencies—the PWA, the Army Engineers, and the Bureau of Reclamation.

NRA After-Dinner Speaker Gets Pay Raised to $5,000

A raise in pay from $4,500 to $5,000 a year for William E. Sweet, former Governor of Colorado, was reported yesterday at NRA.

Meanwhile, observers were kept in the dark as to what Sweet's duties would be in the future. He has made scores of speeches promoting the recovery unit in recent months, but the speakers' bureau has been abolished.

The consensus was that Mr. Sweet would continue as NRA's official "after-dinner speaker."

Public Works Funds Reduced To $4,551,141

With Requests for Cash in Billions, PWA Looks to Roosevelt, RFC.

(Associated Press.)

Allotments of $24,540,270 yesterday drained all but $4,551,141 from the Public Works Fund, which once amounted to $3,700,000,000.

Requests for money running into the billions remain on the waiting list and officials are looking hopefully toward the Reconstruction Corporation and President Roosevelt for more funds.

The new allocations went to 215 non-Federal projects, most of them in the drought States, and a majority for schools, water and sewage systems. New York received the largest share for any one city, $4,006,000 for hospitals, piers, water works and a laboratory.

As the PWA money supply dropped to the comparatively paltry $4,500,000, it was announced expenditures on projects were bringing direct employment near the anticipated peak of 700,000. Indirect employment is estimated at double that figure in industries furnishing and transporting materials.

The allotments yesterday are expected by PWA to provide 102,489 man-months of direct employment on construction sites. Recipients have promised work could be started within a short time.

Cleaners Defy NRA on Pay In Richmond

Move Brings Threat of Prosecution From Washington.

Richmond, Va., Aug. 17 (AP).—Richmond cleaners and dyers told the National Recovery Administration today that they would abandon the wage and hour provisions of their code and draw schedules which will probably mean lower wages and longer hours in 112 establishments.

The announcement was made by the Cleaners and Dyers Board of Trade, headed by R. W. Billingsly, president.

The step was taken following a decision by NRA to suspend the price protection and trade practice provision of the code while retaining the wage and hour restrictions.

Word of the decision to abandon the wage and hour clauses brought a swift threat from Washington. Officials there said that if the Richmond firms carry out their plan they would be subject to prosecution and maximum fines of $500 for each day the violation was continued. Parallel State laws give added force to NRA legislation in Virginia, NRA said, and as a result the violators would be subject not only to prosecution under the Federal act but under State law as well.

Further, any person in the business could ask injunctions in State courts to prohibit violation of the law.

The Richmond cleaners have been making a determined fight to force reinstatement of the price cutting. They have been awaiting the outcome of a United States Supreme Court test case of the legality of the Executive Order.

The case is still pending and today's action was taken after it was decided to wait no longer. The cleaners assert that NRA has been "stringing" them with indefinite answers.

Postoffice to Extend Air-Mail Contracts

Officials of the Postoffice Department said yesterday present air-mail contracts, which were let originally for a period of three months, would be extended an additional nine months under authority of the air-mail act approved June 12, this year, the Associated Press reported.

Suspect Jailed At Toronto in Kidnaper Hunt

Telephone Calls About Labatt Ransom Bring First Arrest.

day morning and that he was kept blindfolded until he was released. He said he did not know where he had been taken, and that he did not know who his captors were. He said that the automobile ride preceding his release in Toronto lasted about six hours.

Ontario's attorney general, Arthur Roebuck, obtained a brief statement from Labatt. The brewer said:

"After I was picked up by two men, they put adhesive tape over my eyes and then covered the tape with a pair of glasses, to conceal the bandage."

Roebuck said "I have not told you all that the police know. But I am confident that, in due season, there will be a solution of this crime." He added that police are convinced, more than ever, that the kidnaping was the work of United States gangsters.

Labatt was seized on the road between London and Sarnia Tuesday morning. A woman who lives near the spot told police yesterday she had seen the Labatt automobile "boxed in" by two other cars. It was this tip that led authorities to believe the kidnapers had "turned yellow" and released their man.

U. S. Gang Hunted.

Convinced that the kidnaping was the work of an American gang, the Canadian government put its whole force behind the drive to capture the criminals.

There was speculation today, however, as to how much information Labatt has given authorities. Inspector John Miller, of the Provincial Police, was one of the few persons admitted to the Labatt home in London. It was problematical whether he received much information.

Many were of the opinion that the brewer may have been released without payment of ransom on promise that he would not disclose details of his abduction. Such considerations, backed up by a threat of reprisals against Labatt and his family, might conceivably bear much weight, it was pointed out.

Again, it was considered possible that Canadian police were being given full details of the affair, that they might proceed with relentless vigor in their search for the gangsters, and that they were keeping these details from the public for obvious reasons.

It was held significant that a high official of the Labatt breweries told newspapermen that the kidnapers would be in jail within 48 hours—the period of time during which Labatt will be "inaccessible."

Labatt Well Treated

One informant, a member of the family, said Labatt was "well treated." But where he was or who held him the informant has not the faintest idea.

The return of the brewer came dramatically. Following his release on St. Clair avenue, he removed the tape from his eyes and hailed a passing cab. The fact that he drove directly to the Royal York indicated his captors had told him where he would find his brother.

He reached the hotel alone, it was understood, but two men walked with him to the desk. Upstairs his brother had kept constant vigil for two days, ready to pay the $150,000 to the kidnapers and hopeful of receiving some message which would permit of his meeting them, or their go-between.

The brewer, after reaching the hotel desk, said:

"What is the number of Mr. Hugh Labatt's suite? I am John Labatt."

A hotel detective and the night manager quickly escorted Labatt to the basement to avoid crowds. They then took him up to his brother's suite. Hugh Labatt, it was reported, was as much surprised as anyone else to see his brother.

"Exclusion of Police" Charged by Officials

Toronto, Ontario, Aug. 17 (AP).—John S. Labatt, first victim of ransom-seeking kidnapers in Canada, was restored safely today from a 65-hour captivity under strange circumstances.

They brought an official complaint of "lack of cooperation" with the authorities.

Whether any ransom was paid was the subject of conflicting statements.

One source described as authoritative said the London, Ontario brewer was freed without payment of any part of the $150,000 demanded by a note left in his abandoned automobile Tuesday.

In Hamilton, Ontario, a statement was made that "less than $50,000," was paid before Labatt was put out of an automobile in the outskirts of Toronto between midnight and 1 a. m. today.

The formal official statement on the case by Attorney General A. W. Roebuck, of Ontario had this to say:

"This office has no knowledge as to what financial arrangements, if any, were made with the criminals.

"Whatever arrangements were made, neither Hugh Labatt (brother of the kidnaped man), nor his solicitor, Mr. H. G. Ivey, of London, had any hand in their making."

While complaining that "owing to the exclusion of the police from the transaction in its closing hours there is very little * * * on which investigators can build," the attorney general said the authorities are going forward with their work on the case.

2 Die in Plane Crash At Chicago Airport

Chicago, Aug. 17 (U.P.).—Two men were killed tonight when a wind current swept their airplane into a nose dive at Pal-Wauke Airport.

The victims were Albert Normandin, 33 and his passenger, O. A. Crost, 32, both of Chicago. Witnesses said that the pilot failed to head into the wind when he attempted to land.

Askew Ransom Bomb Threat Sent to Aimee

North Carolina Pastor's Kidnapers Demand $25,000.

State Department of Welfare and acting head of the temple in the absence of Mrs. McPherson, who is in Canton, Ohio.

Chief Davis immediately dispatched a copy of the letter by wire to Paul C. Garrison, sheriff of Wayne County, at Goldsboro, N. C., from which city Askew was kidnaped last Tuesday.

The letter read:

"Get $25,000 at once or you will lose your worker, Askew, in North Carolina. This better be forthcoming or your temple will be blown up. Everything is set."

The letter was mailed August 15 from Richmond, Va. It was typewritten on plain white paper.

A guard immediately was thrown around Angelus Temple.

Although Temple authorities refused to be quoted, it was understood they had communicated with Mrs. McPherson as to whether the $25,000 would be paid.

Police assumed the demand was made on the Temple because it is headquarters of the "Four Square Gospel" and because Mr. Askew had been identified as a minister of that faith.

Whether the letter contained instructions as to how and when the money was to be paid, Police Chief Davis did not say.

Police said there was little doubt as to the authenticity of the letter. North Carolina reports said a note received by Askew's wife demanding $25,000 ransom was similar to that received by Angelus Temple here.

Goldsboro, N. C., Aug. 17 (U.P.).—The search for R. H. Askew, missing evangelist, for whom $25,000 ransom has been demanded, took a fantastic and mystifying turn tonight.

Sheriff Paul Garrison said he was checking a widespread report that Askew had gone to Los Angeles to join Aimee Semple McPherson, whose Four-Square Gospel Askew has been preaching in a tent here.

Simultaneously it was learned that Askew last week told a clergyman friend at Kinston, N. C., that he planned soon to go to Los Angeles to become associated with Mrs. McPherson's organization.

Sheriff Garrison said that at first he was inclined to scoff at the report, but that when it became so insistent he decided to investigate the possibility of Askew's having gone West.

Garrison made it clear, however, that the report was but one of a number that have been received, and that all were being checked.

Fear for Pastor's Life.

Goldsboro, N. C., Aug. 17 (AP).—Federal agents today expressed fear for the life of R. H. Askew, 28-year-old evangelist whose wife has been instructed to have $25,000 ransom ready Saturday "or you will never see your husband alive again."

The operatives refused to divulge any information they have gathered, asserting it might endanger the missing evangelist's life. They instructed Mrs. Askew not to make anything public.

Reports from a reliable source, however, said the wife of the missing man had received a telegram from Washington today, in the nature of a follow-up to a note she received through the mails the day after her husband disappeared. The note demanded ransom on pain of death for Askew and promised further instructions.

Money Demand Repeated.

Today's message, unsigned, was reported to have said merely:

"Have the money ready Saturday."

The previous note mentioned the amount demanded and was postmarked here Tuesday, the day Askew disappeared after announcing he was going to Smithfield, a nearby town, to buy brick to construct a tabernacle. He had been conducting services in a tent.

The Federal men said their first object was Askew's safe return.

Whether the money would be ready Saturday, or what possible steps would be taken, remained a secret. The Askews are not persons of means. They have spent their three years of married life teaching and in itinerant evangelical work. Mrs. Askew's brother, Roby Geer, a power in Democratic politics in Watauga and surrounding counties, is a large landowner, but was understood not to be wealthy. He is a former legislator and chairman of the County Board of Commissioners.

Kidnap Theories Differ.

Mrs. Askew was formerly principal of the Blowing Rock School, where Askew taught for a time before and after their marriage. Mrs. Askew is a 50-year-old mountain woman, while Askew is a native of Onslow County, on the North Carolina coastal plain.

While officers worked apparently on the ransom kidnap theory, some of Askew's followers expressed the theory that he might have been abducted by enemies he was reported to have made in religious circles here.

Askew came here last October as pastor of the Free Will Baptist Church. There were charges he did not conform to church doctrines in his sermons, and he resigned. He then established a "Four Square" Gospel Tabernacle. Factional trouble also had been reported in his new congregation.

Canton, Ohio, Aug. 17 (AP).—Aimee Semple McPherson, here tonight on her lecture tour, said she knew nothing of the letter demanding $25,000 for the release of R. H. Askew, North Carolina pastor.

Mrs. McPherson, who leaves tonight for Montreal, said she had been making so many one and two night stands that her mail had not caught up with her.

"I've been quite out of touch with the Temple lately," she said. "I presume the letter was opened by my secretary."

"Who is he, the man that was kidnaped in Canada?" the Evangelist asked when told of the ransom letter, which carried a threat that the Temple would be blown up.

Telegram Starts D. C. Search for Kidnapers

The search for the kidnapers of R. H. Askew, North Carolina pastor, shifted here last night as Department of Justice operatives sought the author of a telegram sent from here to Askew's family directing that the ransom money be "ready by Saturday."

Department of Justice operatives refused to discuss their investigation. Nor would they disclose the text of the message. The Washington field office of the Justice Department is cooperating with North Carolina officials in their search for the kidnapers.

decline to derive the right to this gigantic step of reforming the German Reich merely from previously granted power," the reference being to the enabling act under which he is governing the country.

During the speech his voice often was strained by the great fervor of his appeal but never so much as when, emphasizing every word, he justified party unity and dictatorship by declaring:

"Sound working of the economic life of the nation is * * * impossible in times of political decay in a nation which makes an end to every authority."

Small Audience Present.

A comparatively small audience applauded especially his sallies against "international enemies"—"the small clique of international troublemakers who live on stirring up discord in the world."

Throughout Germany people gathered about radio receiving sets in homes, halls and public squares to hear the speech.

Every Nazi propaganda facility has been concentrated on getting a big vote of approval Sunday, and Hitler's address reflected that concentration.

To some neutral observers the speech marked a big stride forward from July 13, when in the Reichstag he gave his explanation of the killings in connection with his "purge" of June 30. Then he seemed tired and discouraged.

Today he was earnest and forceful.

"To foreign strictures about harsh methods," he said in the course of his address, "I can only reply that our party has lost in its legal fight for power 400 dead and more than 43,000 wounded.

"We do not wish to shed blood; we did not thirst for revenge; we only want to win the people over to a new community system."

Again Hitler told Germany that he does not want the title held by the late field marshal, whom he described as "a unique personality who can not be replaced."

"His mission as Reichspresident found its fulfillment in itself," he declared. "No one in the future shall take that title."

Fusion Party Claims Backing Of Democrats

Overwhelming Number in Montgomery Behind Ticket, Is Report.

An "overwhelming number" of Montgomery County's independent Democrats have signed petitions favoring Fusion party candidates, the party's campaign committee said last night in a statement spiking reports of dissatisfaction of progressive Democrats with the party's slate.

William L. Aud, chairman of the committee, said:

"The campaign committee of the Fusion party of Montgomery County, after having carefully checked petitions signed by 500 voters pledging support to the Fusion candidates in the November election, finds that the petitioners are composed of citizens from all sections of the county.

"The committee furthermore states that despite rumors broadcast by the Democratic machine to the effect that progressive Democrats are dissatisfied, an overwhelming number of progressive Democrats signed the petition. The committee states also that a survey made of sentiment in the past week, and while Democratic politicians are trying to stir up trouble among the Fusionists by saying that Republican candidates are receiving higher salaried jobs than Democrats, shows that the rank and file of voters are not interested in whether a Democrat or a Republican gets a certain salary, but are unanimous in desiring to place capable men in charge of the county government regardless of political plums."

The Fusion petition will be presented to the county board of election supervisors to comply with the law requiring at least 500 indorsements before a new party can place a slate on the ballot.

An opinion was given yesterday by Kenneth Lyddane, attorney for the board, that presentation of the petition would relieve the candidates of the expense of a filing fee. He said candidates on the Democratic ticket who filed individually also could have taken advantage of the saving gained by circulating a petition.

Women Fusionists To Meet Monday

The women's section of the Fusion Club of Rockville District will meet at 8 p. m. Monday in the Rockville Courthouse, Mrs. John A. Holmes, temporary chairman, announced yesterday.

Mrs. Harvey W. Wiley, Washington clubwoman, will speak on "Civic Responsibilities of the Women of Today."

The club will elect a permanent chairman and secretary and select district workers for the November campaign.

Textile Men Vote Strike Extension

trator Hugh Johnson is "not high enough up" to be able to "do anything about the strike."

"In a spirit of courtesy only, we would thank Gen. Johnson for anything he could do," he continued, "but the President of the United States is the only man powerful enough to force the textile industry to meet us."

McMahon said cotton textile employers had never recognized the United Textile Workers as the collective bargaining representative of their employes.

Francis J. Gorman, also of Providence, reelected first vice president, asserted the threatened strike might not be called. With the triumph of conservative elements of the union in the election of officers, he said the strike call might be employed only as a potential weapon with which to force negotiations for a settlement of grievances.

McMahon was reelected by acclamation after Riede, candidate of the so-called "progressive" group, withdrew. His action followed a series of conferences in which the progressives agreed to support McMahon.

William F. Kelley, of Philadelphia, unanimously was reelected second vice president.

The membership of the executive council was increased from 9 to 17, and ten members at large will be elected later. Officers are members ex-officio. The new executive council will meet immediately after the close of the convention to set a date for the cotton textile strike and to discuss procedure.

Havana, Ill., Aug. 17 (AP).—Helped by two men with a submachine gun, Mrs. Sylvia Springman escaped from Deputy Sheriff Ora L. Laws today while she was being taken to a dentist.

She was being held in the Mason County Jail on auto theft charges when she complained of a toothache. As the woman stepped into a car for the trip to the dentist Laws was forced back when menaced by the machine gun.

Red Army Fails In Offensive At Antietam

Blue Troops Hold East Bank of Famous Creek in War Games.

Cascade, Md., Aug. 17 (Spl.).—Repulsing the "red" army counter attack, the Twenty-ninth Division staff today successfully completed the annual command post exercise. The battle ended with the "blue" troops defending the east bank of Antietam Creek, near Leitersburg, Md.

Yesterday, the enemy was driven back in confusion with the main line of resistance of the Twenty-ninth Division advancing into "red" territory. Reenforcements were rushed to the aid of the enemy and the advance stopped on the Ring Gold ridge. They advanced from Hagerstown, and penetrated the line of the Ninety-first Brigade, on the south flank of the division, but were driven back in a counter attack. An enveloping movement of the north then failed when the Fifty-eighth Brigade drove the enemy back, ending the battle.

Tomorrow morning, a critique will be held and a solution discussed.

The headquarters detachment, military police company, and Norfolk Signal Company, special troops of the division, set up offices and communications lines at the new command post early this morning.

The 121st Engineers went on a six-mile march this morning, studying the terrain for possible engineering problems. Plans for roads and bridge repairing were discussed, but no actual construction took place.

At the evening parade, the troops were commanded by noncommissioned officers while the entire staff and company officers stood on the reviewing line with Col. John W. Oehmann. The regimental staff was Sergt. Maj. John B. Coffman, commanding; Sergt. Charles L. Rust, adjutant; Sergt. Arthur A. Harrison and Corp. Louis Sheers. First Sergt Gibson, of Company B, acted as commander of the First Battalion, with Sergt. Von Ahm as his adjutant, while First Sergt. William D. Putnam, Company E, commanded the Second Battalion, with Sergt. Henry D. Green as his adjutant. Company commanders were as follows: Company A, First Sergt. Arby C. Pyles; Company B, First Sergt. Ira B. Waltz; Company C, First Sergt. Julius Andre; Company D, First Sergt. Neil Goen.

His wife answered "No." Then another member of the family relieved her, to listen and occasionally interrupt with a brief reply to pathetic, unrelated questions.

On and on Campbell talked, his voice neither rising nor falling, inflection scarcely noticeable. Uncle Jerry Sigler got up from his post on the edge of the living room sofa.

"Why, he looks at you so straight," Uncle Jerry said. "But he seems tired and I believe he will die soon if he doesn't stop."

Through the round of subjects Campbell talked on. Sometimes he told a joke and no one laughed. Once he related a suggestive story. But every once in a while he returned to the statement, "I'm not getting any better."

"He will just have to talk the thing out," Dr. Charles Salo Jackson, family physician, said. "If his strength is longer than his bad luck he will live. I have hopes for him, after giving him dope enough for a five-hour sleep last night." Campbell has slept only nine hours in 20 days and then only under sedatives.

"Donald always was a nervous boy," the doctor said. "And it's probably worry, his job and all, that did it. That fall the papers mention all the time wasn't much. Even in school when other boys laughed and played, Donald worried a lot."

Warrenton Opens Liquor Dispensary

Warrenton, Va., Aug. 17 (Spl.).—The liquor dispensary operating here under the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board opened today. A stock of 850 cases of whiskies, wines and other liquors makes it the largest store in this section.

A resolution was presented to A. B. C. authorities by the Warrenton town council asking that the local dispensary be closed at 6 p. m. instead of 9 p. m. on week days and 11 p. m. on Saturdays. The A. B. C. board in Richmond has not replied and the dispensary here shall operate as late as those elsewhere in the State.

Navy's Balloon In Poland Race

Kendall, Orville to Pilot Bag in International Contest Sept. 23.

Participation of Lieut. Charles Kendall and Lieut. Howard Orville of the Navy, winners of the National Elimination Balloon Race at Birmingham, July 31, in the Gordon Bennett International Balloon Race at Warsaw, Poland, was authorized yesterday by Secretary Swanson.

The Gordon Bennett contest will be held September 23. It will be for the fourth of these International Trophies, other cups having been removed from competition when won three times by one country. The trophy was won last year by Poland's entry in the International race at Chicago.

Lieut. Kendall, in command of the Navy entry in the Birmingham race, made his report yesterday to Navy officials concerning the details of his flight. The pilot of the winning bag, which traveled a distance of 206 miles, said the rain and fog "made navigation out of the question part of the time."

Next U. S. Step In Chicago Bus Strike Veiled

Administration Leaders Tight-Lipped in Face of Firm's Defiance.

(Associated Press.)

The Government's next move in the Chicago motor coach strike last night remained uncertain.

President Roosevelt, at his press conference yesterday, expressed interest in the case and said he was going to inquire into it.

Secretary Perkins, at her conference with newsmen, smilingly indicated that some move, as yet undisclosed, had been made, but declined to throw any light on what it was.

Lloyd Garrison, chairman of the Labor Relations Board, has had nothing to say since he told reporters Thursday the company was entitled to no further hearing.

Hugh S. Johnson, NRA chief, likewise has had no comment since he said the NRA was going to investigate the case further.

Union employes of the company claim some of their number were discharged for union activity. The company retorted that they were let out for inefficiency, insubordination, impoliteness and running ahead and behind of schedule with their busses.

In about ten cases the Labor Board upheld the union's contention and ordered the drivers taken back. The company failed to respond. The board then turned the case over to the NRA compliance board for Blue Eagle removal. Several days later Johnson ordered a further investigation.

on: "Hearing no objections, the amendments stand adopted, 10 to 2. Next bill."

Two papers were tossed at Long.

"Senator Wingate offers one amendment. We don't want this other one," he said blandly, pocketing the second sheet of paper.

"I object on behalf of Senator Brodtmann," Secretary Leche chimed in.

"Aw, wait a minute," Brodtmann complained. "This is going too fast. It's getting to be more than a burlesque. I'd like to know just what the bill is."

"Well," Long replied, "this is a bill about the city charter of New Orleans that merely puts it back where it was before 1932."

"But what is it?" Brodtmann persisted.

"Oh, it provides——"

Dore terminated the discussion.

The bill to prohibit disseminating race-track information came up.

"This is another good bill that ought to be passed," Long counseled.

"Is there any discussion? There being no further discussion, the bill stands favorably reported, 10 to 2," sang out Dore.

"But what does it mean?" some member asked, somewhat feebly.

"Gentlemen," the chairman breezed on, "that's all the bills. The committee now stands adjourned—sine die."

Latest Screen and Stage Bills Offer Diversified Entertainment

"Going Native" All-Washington Revue, Fox Hit

Local Performers Able; Mystery Film at Earle; Other Programs.

By Nelson B. Bell.

"HIDEOUT," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of a story by Mauri Grashin, adapted to the screen by Frances Goodrich and Albert Hackett, starring Robert Montgomery, with Maureen O'Sullivan, Edward Arnold, Elizabeth Patterson, Whitford Kane, Mickey Rooney, C. Henry Gordon and Muriel Evans. Directed by W. S. Van Dyke. Reviewed Friday afternoon.

Elaborately staged, rich in resident talent and effectively routined, the second annual edition of "Going Native," the all-Washington revue, which opened a week's engagement at Loew's Fox Theater yesterday before audiences that overflowed the capacity of the theater from first performance to last, demonstrates again that it is no accident that the National Capital has supplied a long list of stars to the stage, motion pictures and radio, Washington by some providential dispensation is a natural cradle of the Thespic arts.

The present production of "Going Native" follows neither the form nor the tempo of its predecessor of last season. It is scenically more spectacular and in movement more deliberate. Brooke Johns, last year's master of ceremonies, whipped his troupe into high speed and constant action. Arthur Godfrew, in contrast, works deliberately and permits those he introduces to do likewise. Which method is preferable is, of course, a matter of personal taste. I dare say the consensus of opinion will be that this year's is the beter and more finished exhibit, if not the most rigid adherent to some of the primary tenets of "showmanship." These observations, by the way, are based on the evidence of yesterday's second performance.

Radium Number Opens.

Mr. Godfrey's voice is heard first through the loudspeaker, introducing a "Novelty in Radium"—the choral hand drill in phosphorescent gloves—and then comes on stage, with Mr. Godfrey accompanying it, to present a simulation of his early morning broadcasts. From time to time, Mr. Godfrey does a "David Ross" with some brief poem or other, or participates in the act of someone he has just introduced. All very droll and occasionally a little on the side of "sophistication" and the risque.

Archie Hawks comes next with a tap dance in the Hal LeRoy manner and then Margaret Eddington does a song or two in approved fashion.

One of the cleverest skits in the revue is the "Fox Service" sketch presented by Eddie Perkins, the singing usher; Marjorie Mitchell, Jay Kimmel, the dancing usher, and Murrell Lank, Fox doorman. Miss Mitchell is cast as the audience to whom service is rendered to an astonishing degree — to sufficient degree, as a matter of fact, to score one of the smash hits of the show.

Other show-stoppers are Robert Carlisle Mainfort, card manipulator par excellence, who really approaches the dexterity of Cardini, just as Mr. Godfrey says; The Three Aces, well-known radio entertainers, and the Washboard Sextet of colored syncopationists.

An Ensemble Number.

The Columbus Circle soap-box oratory of "The Scatter-Brain Trust" skit borrowed a suggestion from "Let 'em Eat Cake." Julia Cunningham offers a solo dance specialty that clicks and Mr. Godfrey and Susan Hall put on "Love Interest," in the form of an acrobatic dance and coloquy with Mr. Godfrey doing all the colloquying and Miss Hall all the dancing. Mary Day, with Evelyn Tyner at the piano and the line girls for background, does a ballet number, "Going Modern," with professional polish.

The finale introduces the entire membership of the company, including Prof. Lampkin, who comes up out of the orchestra pit to play a part and speaks lines.

Gene Ford, who directed the whole business, was the only one missing. Modesty probably forbade, for he did a swell job.

A Hit on Screen.

On the screen is one of the most engaging vehicles Robert Montgomery has had in recent months, a simple, wholesome and delightfully amusing picture called "Hideout" that may, perhaps, best be described as a companion piece to to "Turn to the Right," the John Golden production that flourished a decade or two ago.

Mr. Montgomery is cast as a big city racketeer who reaches a point where the spot on which the police have placed him gets a trifle too hot for comfort. Trapped keeping a date with his moll, Lucky Wilson makes his getaway in a motor car, bearing a revolver slug in his side as a memento of his brush with McCarthy, of headquarters.

He manages to drive over into Connecticut and is taken into the home of a simple pastoral family to recuperate from his "hold up" by "gangsters." Here he falls in love with the daughter of the household, is discovered by his friends with the badges in their pockets and taken back to New York to be sent up for a "stretch" of 18 months in the big house, pledged at the end of that time to return and settle down on the farm.

The story, as I have said, is simple and direct and the sort that can not be skeletonized and give any adequate notion of its breezy humor, brisk action and brittle situations. It is a sure-fire hit that was vastly enjoyed by the audiences that presumably were attracted primarily yesterday by the local revue.

The Fox Movietone News is the only supplementary of a bill that may be expected to perpetuate yesterday's extraordinary attendance record throughout the week.

To accommodate the crowds, doors at the Fox will be open today at 10:15 a. m.—and it would be well to allow a little time to stand in line, even then!

Next Role Will Be as Empress

With the National release date set for this month, Marlene Dietrich, last seen in "Song of Songs," will next appear in the role of Catherine the Great, in Josef von Sternberg's production of "The Scarlet Empress," in which John Lodge is her leading man. This picture is reputed to reach new heights of artistry and to reveal a treatment that combines scenic magnificence with fine acting and a tremendously effective use of music—voices, instruments and chimes in an overpowering rendition of "Kamennoi Ostrow."

Palace

"TREASURE ISLAND," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of the story by Robert Louis Stepenson, adapted to the screen by John Lee Mahin, starring Wallace Beery and Jackie Cooper, with Lionel Barrymore, Lewis S. Stone, Otto Kruger, Charles ("Chic") Sale, William V. Mong and Dorothy Peterson. Directed by Victor Fleming. Reviewed Friday morning by Isabel Harraman Mangum.

"Fifteen men on a dead man's chest, Yo, ho, ho! and a bottle o' rum."

And here is Robert Louis Stevenson's immortal story playing to a capacity and overflowing house at its initial performance, and presumably, every performance thereafter, until its flickering silver shadows are threadbare and little boys cease to be little boys, little girls cease to be little girls and men and women cease to be little boys and girls grown up and possessed of a wistful nostalgia to recapture all the glamour and thrills of those bygone days.

They're all there—every adventurous, rollicking, blood-thirsty one of them and they'll pit their enduring fascination against your complacent sophistication and . . . pfft!

Comedy and Pathos.

You'll laugh and cry with Jim Hawkins, who is wonderfully played by that small, clever veteran, Jackie Cooper; you'll chill at evil, pathetic Bil Bones calling for his noggin of rum and lustily blowing his nose, and we rather suspect Lionel Barrymore enjoyed playing this bit, with its "fifteen men on a dead man's chest" refrain.

Then, there's Lewis Stone, as the brave Capt. Smollett; Otto Kruger, as Doctor Livesy, and that most rapscallionly enchanting figure in all literature, the delightfully iniquitous Long John Silver. Wallace Beery makes Long John as wicked and deceitful as Mr. Stevenson could desire, but the exigencies of a "happy ending" have made the peg-legged pirate into quite a humanized and lovable old rascal, too.

Memorable Performance.

Black Dog, Ugly Israel Hands, the Admiral Benbow Inn, the good ship Hispaniola, Long John's parrot and all the scarred and brutal buccaneers that ever sailed the Spanish Main are transplanted directly from the pages of the book to the shadows of the screen and lose nothing, but gain much, in the transition.

The story of that thrilling search for pirate gold is so well known that it scarcely needs reviewing, but just in passing, we'll wager all the pieces of eight you can find on "Treasure Island" that it will be many a day before you forget the performances turned in by Jackie Cooper and Wallace Beery.

Subsidiary features of the bill include a Walt Disney Mickey Mouse, entitled "Mickey's Steam Roller"; a Metrotone News and a Fitzpatrick Travelogue, "Citadels of the Mediterranean."

RKO-Keith's

"JANE EYRE," Monogram Pictures' filmization of Charlotte Bronte's famous novel, adapted to the screen by Adele Commandini, featuring Virginia Bruce and Colin Clive, supported by Beryl Mercer, Aileen Pringle, David Torrence and Edith Fellowes. Directed by Christy Cabanne. Reviewed Friday night by Dorothea Lewis.

This love story, which Charlotte Bronte published as "By Currer Bell" and dedicated to Mr. Thackeray almost 100 years ago, has a freshness, charm and simplicity distinctly its own and rather delightful. We liked it very much.

It is particularly interesting now with the world apparently just full of new plays (by Clemence Dane, Don Totheroh and the girl next door) about the Brontes—Charlotte, Emily, Ann and Bramwell, who sent their writings from the Haworth Parsonage to London, neatly labeled with their Bell nom des plumes—"Currer Bell" for Charlotte, "Ellis Bell" for Emily, &c.—and who died one after another worn out so soon.

We are like the people all about us last night, who were murmuring, "I can't remember the details of the novel at all," but the important things are here.

Salient Features Present.

There is Jane, the spunky, lovable little girl who let neither cruel relatives nor orphanage down her; Mr. Rochester, whom she learns to love when she goes to his home as governess for his little niece; the strange screams in one wing of that home; the silence and mystery that hinder their love and sadden Rochester; the fire, and Rochester's blindness.

And for those who want an even happier ending than the picture's, we whisper a reminder that in her book, Charlotte tells of Rochestr's sights improving until he can glimpse the ornament around his Janes' neck and see, faintly, but see, nevertheless, that the color of her graceful dress is blue.

In the persons of Virginia Bruce and Colin Clive, Jane and Rochester come, not only satisfactorily, but vitally and movingly alive.

Principals Score.

Clive we have long esteemed and he is splendid here, but Miss Bruce has been but one of the Mrs. John Gilbert's to us until now. From this moment, she is a most unusually lovely blonde, and a very quiet, sensitive and interesting actress. Together they give the play real feeling.

Beryl Mercer, old friend Aileen Pringle, John Rogers, as Sam Poole, and Little Edith Fellowes lend aid. The clothes are lovely, the settings nice, and both direction and photography worthy of praise.

Subsidiaries include a welcome return engagement of "The Big Bad Wolf and Little Red Riding Hood," which rightly wins applause, a very boring comedy "Unlucky Strike," an issue of "Screen Snapshots" and the Pathe News with views of the impressive Hindenburg funeral rites.

Columbia

"CHARLIE CHAN'S COURAGE," Fox picturization of "The Chinese Parrot," by Earl Derr Biggers, featuring Warner Oland, Donald Woods and Drue Leyton. Directed by George Hadden. Reviewed Friday afternoon by W. A. Whitney.

In all the Charlie Chan stories thus far—and, presumably, in all those that are to come—there is one outstanding character which sets off Earl Derr Biggers' yarns from all the others—the unhurried, but determined principal character, Honolulu's contribution to the roll of great detectives.

"Charlie Chan's Courage" lives up to the tradition, in spite of a somewhat misleading title, for Mr. Chan neither requires nor here shows any more "courage" than is his habit. There is, to be sure, a crime committed with Charlie—good old Charlie—on the spot almost immediately, and out of the maze of possible solutions the true one emerges, not entirely without the typical Biggers surprise.

Thoroughly Contrived Mystery.

What the crime is, or why it was committed, should not be disclosed, nor the general trend of the narrative. Seldom has a mystery been so thoroughly contrived that the least possible suggestion would give away certain elements of the essential plot, all of which should rightfully be unknown prior to a visit to the theater.

The work of Charlie Chan is perfectly well known; likewise the manner in which Warner Oland delineates the Oriental ratiocinator. Accordingly, anything that might be set down here as a further expostulation, either of Chan or Mr. Oland, would elicit only remarks of "So what? We knew that all along!"

Unobtrusive, indeed, is the love interest furnished by Donald Woods and Drue Leyton, a newcomer to the screen. In each succeeding vehicle since "As the Earth Turns," Mr. Woods has been showing improvement in his screen work (good to begin with), combining all the better qualities of a matinee idol with a thoughtful reading of lines and a thorough understanding of the dramatic place of the character he is playing.

Support and Subsidiaries.

Miss Leyton, an attractive blonde, has more to do than to be only that, making not only an admirable match for Mr. Woods, but an excellent contribution to the major development of the plot. The others presenting convincing performances are Reginald Mason, Paul Harvey, Murray Kinnell, Harvey Clark, Virginia Hammond, James Wang and a parrot that screams in a most appropriate place.

In the supporting program, the Terrytoon, "Pandora," offers Paul Terry's version of the legend from Greek mythology; "Benny, from Panama" presents Jeanette Loff and Eddie Foy, jr., in a slapstick bridal farce, with music, and Paramount News contributes the highlights of current events.

Straight From the Studios

Mae West Says No Need to Wire Car to Shock Folks; Gun Backfires Through Jack Holt's Ear; Intimate Chatter of Hollywood.

By Speed Kendall.

Hollywood, Aug. 17.—Autograph hounds complained yesterday that they have received strange electrical shocks when they touched the automobiles of certain actresses while ganged around endeavoring to secure signatures. These shocks of sufficient strength, they asserted, to keep them away.

MAE WEST

They named Mae West, Marlene Dietrich and Katherine Hepburn among those who assertedly have their chasses wired, but the actresses pooh-pooh the idea, averring they wouldn't think of doing such a thing to the little kiddies who camp on their trails with autograph albums. Miss West was especially perturbed at the thought; she said she doesn't need electricity to shock anybody.

Jack Holt Wounded.

Skeet shooting appears to be as risky as it is exciting. Jack Holt and Clark Gable were practicing yesterday on the latter's range. They were equipped with thick glass goggles to protest their eyes, but one of the little lead pellets backfired on Holt and cut a neat hole in his ear.

High-Hat Tully.

That rough-and-ready author, Jim Tully, is gaining quite a reputation for himself for his lavish, swanky buffet parties. The setting is his mansion which nestles in a grove of trees on the side of Toluca Lake. He and his guests sit around and discuss art, literature and things cultural.

What Makes an Actress?

Erin O'Brien Moore, actress recruit from New York and London, actually cries every time she sees herself on the screen. Tears were streaming down her cheeks when she walked from the projection room at Radio Studio after seeing daily rushes on "Dangerous Curves." Her explanation is that she has always been a nervous and emotional person and the shock of viewing herself on the screen and hearing herself talk is too much for her nervous system.

All Brooklynites From Warners'.

The roster at Warners' carries the names of nine players who claim Brooklyn as their home: Ross Alexander, Verres Teasdale, Barbara Stanwyck, Phil Reed, Phil Regan, Aline MacMahon, Dorothy Tree, Dorothy Dare and Russell Hicks.

Option Time Around Again.

Smiling faces at Columbia yesterday meant options had been renewed. James Blakeley, Charles Sabin, Florence Rice, Inez Courtney, Robert Allen and Director Leo Bulgakov, all recruited from New York, received new tickets.

Columbia also usually has been a heavy borrower of talent, but yesterday the records showed Gene Raymond, Nancy Carroll, Ann Sothern, George Murphy, Donald Cook, Richard Cromwell, John Buckler and Geneva Mitchell all were loaned out to other producers.

Odd and Interesting People and Events.

George Brent, under his Warner Bros. contract, is prohibited from playing polo. Loaned to M-G-M for Garbo's picture, "The Painted Veil," he had to play the game in the picture and Warners made the borrowing company take out special insurance. . . Edward Everett Horton's mother and sister left today for the summer at Lake George, in New York. . . Miriam Hopkins keeps comfortable around RKO studio by wearing shorts. . . Melvin Douglas talks to his wife every night in San Francisco, where she is playing in "Mary of Scotland."

Metropolitan

"HERE COMES THE NAVY," Warner Bros. picturization of a story by Ben Markson, adapted to the screen by Ben Markson and Earl Baldwin, starring James Cagney, with Pat O'Brien, Gloria Stuart, Dorothy Tree, Frank McHugh, Robert Barrat, Willard Robertson, Guinn ("Big Boy") Williams and Maude Eburne. Directed by Lloyd Bacon. Return engagement.

Asserting the right of any adventurous, screen romance to as protracted a downtown showing as public interest seems to justify, that briny story of love and duty with the Pacific battle fleet, "Here Comes the Navy," yesterday took possession of the Metropolitan's silver sheet to continue the run recently so auspiciously launched at the Earle.

Against a background of authentic navy life, there is related an interesting, humorous and, at times, exciting fictional story of a rebellious gob and his attempt to woo the sister of his immediate superior, to whom he was so anxious to administer a bit of mayhem that he had joined the U. S. N. for that specific purpose and no other. After having acquitted himself a hero, the young recalcitrant is transferred to the air service, where he again disobeys orders and again becomes a hero.

Wins the Girl.

Eventually, he wins the girl and calls off the feud with her brother, but not until the film has furnished a fine bit of recruiting propaganda for the navy and disclosed every possible form of activity in which its enlisted personnel may be engaged.

James Cagney, Pat O'Brien, Gloria Stuart and Frank McHugh have the pivotal roles and, in the large view, make the most of them—especially Mr. Cagney and the equally belligerent Mr. O'Brien.

"The Winnah," an amusing musical farce of intercollegiate activities, culminating in a game of checkers "for dear old State," introducing Arthur and Florence Lake, Dorothy Dare, Weldon Heyburn and Ralph Riggs in congenial roles; "Buddy, the Woodsman," a cartoon comedy, adding new wrinkles to the problem of forest utilization and a full newsreel augment a feature that is packed with action and full of laughs. Stone, who at 61 is essaying his first straight dramatic role after 50 years in the theater, gained his greatest fame as the partner of Dave Montgomery in a dancing act. A season or so ago, George M. Cohan, another leading song-and-dance man, appeared in a "heavy" role in Eugene O'Neill's "Ah! Wilderness."

County League Studying Drive For New Funds

$8,000 to $12,000 Needed for Relief Work in Montgomery.

Possibility of a second drive for funds is being studied by officials of the Montgomery County Social Service League, it was learned yesterday. The league is faced with the possibility of having to suspend operations in its last quarter if additional funds of between $8,000 and $12,000 are not forthcoming.

Expenditures under its present schedule of relief work will amount to about $45,000 and estimated receipts total only $33,000. League officials were unable to draft an accurate schedule of needed funds at the beginning of the year because of the unsettled conditions caused by the separation of the league from unemployment relief work in the county.

A steadily increasing case load is making still further inroads on the league's funds and unless some method is devised to finance the activities of the league for the remainder of the fiscal year drastic curtailment of relief work in the county will be necessary.

Officials of the league announced, however, that a conference with the board of county commissioners had brought assurances that the county government would endeavor to formulate a plan whereby the relief work could be continued.

The annual drive by public subscription last May netted approximately $11,000, about $1,000 over the quota. According to Frederic P. Lee, chairman of the finance committee, estimated receipts for the year are $33,000, while expenditures will run from $41,000 to $45,000.

Since its separation from the county welfare board last spring, the league has handled relief cases in the county covering virtually every social problem except unemployment.

ARLINGTON COUNTY BUREAU OF THE POST.
Tel. Clar. 598. Clarendon, Va.

Summer classes in the county schools closed yesterday, sending more than 400 children home for a short vacation prior to opening of the fall term September 10.

Of the group attending classes at the Washington-Lee High School, six completed their studies and received diplomas. They were Wilson Tolford, Mabel Brooks, Philip Warner, Mary Waller, Charles Watson and Ruth Money.

Completing the survey for the location of the log cabin, the first unit of building at Camp Arki, sponsored by the Arlington County Kiwanis Club, members will go to the site located on Mount Olivet road today to cut trees for logs which will go into the simple structure.

Within the next three weeks, the Kiwanians expect to have built, mostly with their own hands, a cabin 20 by 30 feet, with a kitchen lean-to which will accommodate 20 boys.

Members of the local Boy Scouts are cooperating in building the camp and administering it.

The county board will at a special meeting Monday receive and open bids for the installation of the interceptor sewer line extending from the site of the disposal plant at Four Mile Run in the direction of Rosslyn for a distance of 26,000 feet.

Rapid progress is now being made in the installation of the system. At the present time it is understood that more than 40 miles of sewer line is under construction. The work is being done under the supervision of the J. N. Chester Engineering Co., of Pittsburgh.

Plans are being rapidly completed for the disposal plant and it is expected that the company will ask for bids shortly.

Meeting last night in the offices of County Superintendent Fletcher Kemp, the school board approved expenditures for the month totaling $4,434.59, of which $1,164.75 represented teachers' salaries.

Justices Held Unqualified to Try Rum Cases

Maryland Prosecutor Gives Ruling to Prince Georges Board.

Justices of the peace are not qualified to try cases involving violations of the State liquor laws, a ruling by Willis R. Jones, deputy attorney general of Maryland, declared yesterday. The ruling was given in response to a request from A. Gwyn Bowie, counsel to the Prince Georges County Board of License Commissioners.

A licensee convicted in the county police court had appealed to the circuit court from a charge of possessing untaxed liquor. Mr. Bowie asked for a ruling on whether the license board is compelled to revoke or suspend the accused man's license pending action of the higher court.

Jones held it is not mandatory for the board to suspend the license, but that it lies within its power to suspend for any cause necessary to promote the peace of the community.

Mr. Jones held that no justice of the peace acting as police justice has jurisdiction to determine a charge of possession of untaxed liquor because the charge provides for a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than five years, or both, in the discretion of the court, which may send the offender to the penitentiary.

Section 12 of article 52 of the code of public general laws confers jurisdiction on these officials only "to try and determine all cases involving the charge of any offense, crime or misdemeanor not punishable by confinement in the Maryland Penitentiary."

Two Auto Victims Ask for $12,500

Woman and Boy Sue for Damages in Maryland.

Two suits for damages claiming personal injuries as the result of automobile accidents were filed yesterday in Prince Georges County Circuit Court at Upper Marlboro, Md.

Norman Sturgeon, through his father, John W. Sturgeon, asked damages of $2,500 as a result of having been struck in Baltimore, January 15, by a car alleged to have been operated by Clarence F. Schatz. The youth was walking when he was struck by the automobile, the petition declares.

Damages of $10,000 are asked by Eliza Bradford, through Attorney Louis Arnold, alleging she was struck by the car of George L. Harrison, of Hyattsville, while crossing the Baltimore boulevard at Hyattsville January 31.

$10,000,000 Lent To Casualty Firm

Help Will Rehabilitate Maryland Organization.

The RFC has loaned an additional $10,000,000 to the Maryland Casualty Co. to finance the purchase of prefered stock and raise the concern to its former strong position in the insurance world, Chairman Jesse H. Jones announced last night.

The company was granted a $7,500,000 loan in April and the loan yesterday, Jones said, "rehabilitates the company, which found itself in difficulties because of heavy mortgage guarantees throughout the country."

3 Prisoners Flee Va. 'Honor Camp'

Petersburg, Va., Aug. 17 (AP).—Officials of the Federal prison camp here broadcast an alarm for three convicts who escaped today.

The men sought are Walter Wagner, 24; Sam Bullett, 27, and Oscar Mullen, 24. All were wearing khaki trousers and blue shirts.

The camp is known as an "honor camp," taking short-term prisoners having good reputations, and it is an easy matter for any of them to leave the inclosure. Officers said, however, that escapes have been rare. Rewards of $50 each are offered for the three who fled today.

Firemen and Bands of Four States in Gala Parade at Waynesboro Convention

These pictures depict the climax, the grand parade, of the four-day thirty-third annual convention of the Cumberland Valley Firemen's Association, at Waynesboro, Pa. In the line of march Thursday night are, left to right, the Hagerstown (Md.) Moose Band, the Independent Fire Company, of Frederick, Md., Waynesboro's Public School Band. Thousands of firemen and visitors and hundreds of pieces of apparatus from Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Maryland and Virginia were in the parade and attended the convention.

Ritchie Better, Friends Hear From France

Really a New Man, Tanney Writes From Coast of Norway.

Baltimore, Aug. 17 (Spl.).—Marked improvement in the condition of Gov. Ritchie during his vacation to France was reported today to Robert B. Ennis, chairman of the board of election supervisors, in a letter from Col. Stuart H. Janney, the Governor's companion on the trip.

"Bert Ritchie is really a new man," the letter says.

The Governor's plan to sail Monday, arriving in Baltimore August 30, are confirmed in the letter. The Governor and Col. Janney have spent more than a month at Coburg, on the coast of Normandy.

Col. Janney's letter to Mr. Ennis says:

"The Governor has been improving every day since we left and just now is in shape for anything.

"I have got some pretty good tales on the boy to narrate when we get together.

"He is not much for these French customs as to breakfast and lunch, and asks the waiters to get boxes of matches, which cost a nickel apiece here, and does not understand why they can't make griddle cakes. However, that has been all straightened out now, and I think he is really enjoying himself.

"We really are not doing anything—to bed early and up a bit late, and enjoy sitting on the beach in the afternoon.

"Several people over here, like Baruch, Young and others, have asked us to join them here and there, but we are going to stick here until time to go home.

"Bert is really a new man."

The Governor's followers are planning a gala welcome for his return.

Six More Democrats File in Anne Arundel

Annapolis, Aug. 17 (Spl.).—The list of Democratic candidates in Anne Arundel County, subject to the nominating primaries September 12, was increased today by six.

Topping the group is George T. Cromwell, Fifth District, for clerk of the circuit court. He is the candidate of the "organization" forces, now in control of county affairs. Mr. Cromwell is a former State Senator and holds the post of register of wills. He will be opposed by James A. Walton, who recently resigned the presidency of the Annapolis Banking & Trust Co., and who is a former president of the board of county commissioners.

A lively contest is indicated, and the fight in the general election in November also will be a warm one, with Frank A. Munroe as the Republican candidate. Mr. Munroe is unopposed in his party, and he also has been indorsed by the Better Government League, a nonpartisan organization. Four years ago Mr. Munroe was barely defeated by Frank S. Revell, organization Democratic leader.

Other candidates who filed are:

John J. Levay, Annapolis merchant, for county commissioner; Thomas J. Cullimore, Eastport merchant, for commissioner from the Second District; Weems R. Duvall and William A. Pumphrey, for commissioners from the Third and Fourth Districts, respectively, and N. Peter Whittle, for delegate to the State convention.

Millers Monopolize Washington Slate

Hagerstown, Aug. 17 (Spl.).—It is beginning to look like the Millers are going to monopolize the primary for the State Senate nomination from Washington County.

Two Millers are now in the race, with the filing yesterday of Leo H. Miller, attorney, who seeks the Republican nomination with Ernest W. Miller, a member of the House of Delegates.

Dr. Victor D. Miller is being urged to seek the Democratic nomination and may file this wek. Leon B. Yourtee and Worthington P. Wachter, Democrats, also seek the nomination.

F. T. Fiery, Republican farmer of Conocheague, has filed for county commissioner.

Samuel C. Strite, one of four recommended by the Republican State central committee for a place on the board of election supervisors, was appointed. He succeeds Harry E. Keedy, who resigned to become a candidate for county treasurer.

Conley Aid in Cumberland.

Cumberland, Md., Aug. 17 (Spl.). Clifford E. James, publicity director for Dr. Charles H. Conley, Frederick candidate for the Democratic nomination for Governor, was in Cumberland yesterday making campaign observations.

Mr. James says Dr. Conley and his friends were not surprised at the withdrawal from the contest of Mayor Jackson of Baltimore. He says the withdrawal clears the situation and improves the chances of the Frederick man.

The Allegany County Trades Council has indorsed Robert B. Kimble, Republican candidate for State senator. Kimble also has the backing of the Maryland State and District of Columbia Federation of Labor; Georges Creek Division of District No. 16, United Mine Workers of America; United Rubber Workers, Federal Labor Union, No. 19007; United Fire Brick and Clay Workers of America and Paper and Sulphate Workers of America.

Others indorsed by the trades council are James Orr, candidate for Allegany County commissioner; J. William (Bill) Norris, candidate for Allegany County commissioner, and David Steele, candidate for Allegany County treasurer.

Bitter Battle Seen to Rule In Frederick

Fight to Finish Between Conley and Ritchie Groups Predicted.

Frederick, Md., Aug. 17 (Spl.).—A bitter fight for Democratic control of Frederick County was made certain today, when adherents of Dr. Charles W. Conley, only candidate in the field to succeed Gov. Albert C. Ritchie, filed full slates with the election supervisor for committeemen and delegates to the State convention.

These candidates have the support of the County-for-Governor Club, while a slate filed recently is backed by the regular Democratic organization, headed by David C. Winebrenner 3d, secretary of state.

The Conley committeemen and delegates filed today are: State central committee—August T. Brust, Frederick; E. Lynch Gross, Brunswick; Ralph G. Kline, Frederick; Michael J. Thompson, Emmittsburg; Harry Wood, Newmarket.

Grove First Man to File.

William J. Grove, Limekiln, chairman of the State committee and sixth member of the ticket, filed his candidacy before the others entered the field.

Delegates to State convention, George A. Holland, Mount Pleasant; Samuel A. Lewis, Frederick; Thomas N. Mohler, Adamstown; Albert N. McCardell, Frederick; Samuel H. Rosenstock, near Frederick; G. Cleveland Trout, Walkersville.

The organization slates, headed by Secretary of State David C. Winebrenner 3d, are: State central committee, Mrs. Andrew A. Annan, Emmitsburg; Mr. Winebrenner, Edward J. Smith, James H. Gambrill, jr., and Dr. B. O. Thomas, Frederick. A sixth candidate has not yet filed.

Delegates to State convention, Col. E. Austin Baughman, near Frederick; John H. Jamison, Walkersville; Howard Marvin Jones, Brunswick; Dr. Ira J. McCurdy, Frederick; Dr. Thomas R. Myers, Libertytown, and Allen M. Fitzer, Lewistown.

Hard Fight Promised.

These tickets were filed early this month, after an offer had been made to checkmate opposition to the organization candidates. At a conference held here, attended by 18 candidates for Democratic nominations, a plan formulated by Mr. Winebrenner was announced whereby the candidates, assuring themselves of Gov. Ritchie's renomination, agreed not to oppose Dr. Conley, and asked for party support of organization slates.

Dr. Conley answered this proffer with a charge of "deathbed repentance" and the antiorganization forces went ahead with the naming of an opposing ticket.

The action of the antiorganization forces in opposing the strong Ritchie organization indicates one of the hardest fights for Democratic supremacy in Frederick County for a generation.

Hopkins, acting coroner, gave a verdict of accidental drowning and the body was turned over to a local undertaker for burial.

The body apparently had been in the water ten days. The man was about 55 years old, 5 feet 8 inches tall, and weighed about 160 pounds. He wore a faded blue shirt, dark blue trousers, black shoes and socks.

Court to Aid Milk Control In Virginia

Producers and Distributors Face Restraint From Disobeying Rules.

Richmond, Aug. 17 (AP).—Milk producers and distributors in areas where the State Milk Commission has established its authority, faced an injunction restraining them from violating the terms of any of the regional rules issued by the commission's offices here, an opinion by Judge Frank Sutton indicated today.

Judge Sutton's opinion, written after hearing argument on the constitutionality of the Milk Control Act last week, was handed to Assistant Attorney General Edwin H. Gibson today. It infers that the injunction will be entered as an order as soon as it is written.

Producers in the Staunton-Waynesboro and Charlottesville areas will be particularly affected. In both areas minority groups either have actually begun litigation against the act or have threatened to ignore it.

When it is entered as an order, the injunction will restrain producers, distributors and producer-distributors from violating provisions of the Milk Control Act or regulations issued in accordance with the act. Attorney General A. P. Staples appeared for the commission.

Mr. Staples and Maj. Edwin H. Gibson, assistant attorney general, appeared before Judge Sutton last week and applied for the injunction in connection with action taken by a group of producer and producer-distributors in the Staunton-Waynesboro area, protesting the constitutionality of the control act, passed by the last General Assembly.

In the Charlottesville area a group, calling itself the Albemarle Independents Association, has defied the commission to enforce price regulations.

L. A. Ward, president of the association, termed the board's action "monopolistic and socialistic."

The Charlottesville opposition hinges on an establishment of a price of 13 cents per quart, retail, for milk which small independent producers, who market and deliver their own milk, have been selling for 10 cents per quart.

Charlottesville Men Will Meet Monday

Charlottesville, Va., Aug. 17 (AP).—Members of the Independent Dairymens' Association of Charlottesville will meet here Monday night to determine what course they will take in the warfare whiche they have begun against State control of milk prices in the Albemarle County area.

Notified that Judge Frank Sutton, in Richmond, had allowed the commonwealth an injunction restraining producers from violating the milk act while its constitutionality is being determined by the courts, L. A. Ward, representing the independents, today said they would continue their present prices until the meeting Monday.

Dr. George W. Spicer, chairman of the local board, pointed out that producers would be liable to contempt of court now if they defied the injunction and still refused to boost their retail prices.

FERA Help For Farming Is Demanded

Charlottesville Speaker Describes Plights of Virginia Growers.

Charlottesville, Va., Aug. 17 (Spl.).—Demanding more action and less talk, Leslie B. Kline, of Winchester, superintendent of Frederick County Schools, pointed out the need for agricultural rehabilitation in Virginia in today's session of the FERA emergency educational training institute at the University of Virginia.

Speaking on the program devoted to adult vocational rehabilitation and colored education in the South, Mr. Kline assailed the policies of the "John W. Davis type of standpat citizen."

John A. Kratz, chief of the vocational rehabilitation division of the United States Office of Education, told of the work of the National program of industrial education for physically handicapped workers.

The need of emergency education for the colored race in the South was pointed out by Dr. Ambrose Caliver, colored education specialist for the FERA.

In answer to questions from emergency educational supervisors and teachers representing Virginia, Maryland, West Virginia, and the District of Columbia, Dr. George Williams, director of emergency education for the Virginia department of education, suggested that vocational classes be conducted along lines of community needs.

Case work in vocational rehabilitation carried on last year was described by R. N. Anderson, supervisor of the work for the Virginia department of education.

Mr. Kline told of the hundreds of Shenandoah Valley farmers who had been forced to part with necessary stock in order to pay taxes and "keep open credit lines at the country stores."

In urging further relief to agriculture, he said that he had seen positive proof of a small margin of profit creeping back into farm produce through AAA activities and the effects of the Western drought.

Man in Baltimore Admits "Murder" To Bar Argument

Baltimore, Aug. 17 (AP).—Police Lieut. Edward Doherty thumbed the keen-edged razor and asked, "What did you do with the night watchman, murder him?"

"Yes, sir! replied the prisoner, Paul Watkins, a Negro.

"What! You cut his throat—slit him from ear to ear with this razor?

"Yes, sir;" was the quiet reply.

The patrol wagon, stretcher and stretcher-bearers aboard, roared down the street—to bring in the night watchman's body from a tailor shop Watkins was charged with robbing.

Policemen battered down the door—plunged in. It was early in the morning. There sat the watchman, Ernest Schlufter, whittling and blinking in the glare of the officers' flashlights.

It was a false alarm. But let Watkins explain—

"I didn't want to disagree with the law," he said. "I just couldn't bear to argue with them that early in the morning."

He was held under $2,000 bond for entering the tailor shop.

Low Prices Hit Eastern Shore Potato Farms

Virginia Growers Report New Deal Has Not Helped Them.

By C. B. Carr.

Newport News, Va., Aug. 17.—The potato growers of the Eastern Shore of Virginia, who comprise a large portion of the voters of the First Virginia Congressional District, hold the opinion that the New Deal has given them a "raw deal," in that they were left out of the provisions of the agricultural adjustment act.

The farmers express this opinion when they compare the high prices which the cotton and tobacco growers apparently will receive for their products this year with the less-than-production price the potato growers obtained for a scant potato crop.

The two principal potato-producing counties of the district are Northumberland and Accomac, considered two of the most productive counties not only in Virginia, but in the United States.

Expected AAA Help.

For several years the potato farmers have been hard hit financially, due to a steadily declining market, they point out. When the Government set up the AAA last year, potato farmers believed that after the Federal authority had subsidized cotton, wheat and tobacco farmers, the potato producers would be remembered. With this idea in mind, they set out to produce a normal crop.

Months passed by and the AAA said nothing of helping the potato raiser. In the meantime, weather conditions were unfavorable for a potato crop, and when harvesting time arrived hardly more than a half normal crop was produced.

Unless potatoes are put in storage they have to be moved rapidly to prevent decay. Few farmers of this section have used storage, but have elected to ship their product to market just as soon as it is dug.

Markets Became Glutted.

Farmers point out that when the first shipments of potatoes reached the metropolitan markets potato prices were just about the cost of production. In a short while the northeastern North Carolina potato-producing belt began shipping hundreds of carloads to the same markets as the Virginians, with the result the markets were glutted.

Within a few days, farmers declare, potato prices had fallen to 75 cents per barrel, far below the cost of production.

After the farmer got to the point where he was unable to meet his crop-producing obligations with the returns from the crop, the Government decided to buy 1,500 carloads of potatoes. The Government's action helped prices temporarily, it is said, by offering $1.40 per barrel, which offer soon was reduced to $1.25.

"But the Government waited too long to help us much," one of the potato farmers remarked, declaring that if the AAA had formulated a crop production and selling organization similar to that set up for the tobacco farmer, the potato farmer would be on "easy street" compared with last year.

Bland Is Unopposed.

Although the potato farmer holds the attitude that the New Deal has given him a "raw deal," his opinion is expected to register but slightly, if at all, at the coming Congressional election. S. Otis Bland, Democrat, of Newport News, is standing for reelection. Thus far he is unopposed and a number of Republican leaders express the opinion that he will have no opposition from them at the November polls, as the party has not called a convention to nominate a Republican candidate. Mr. Bland has served since 1920 in the House of Representatives.

The employment situation in Newport News is reported as favorable, insofar as the Democrats are concerned. The city is said to have one of the lowest unemployment figures in the State with but about 600 people reported idle in a city of about 50,000. The most marked increase in employment here has been due, business men point out, to the increased activity of the Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Company which now has under construction two airplane carriers for the Federal Government.

Rapidan Bridge Opened.

Orange, Va., Aug. 17 (Spl.).—A new bridge over the Rapidan River at Germanna Ford is now open to traffic.

Wheat Export Abandonment Seen Next Year

Frm Administration Men Admit Drought Has Changed Picture.

...arp curtailment in production, du to the drought and acreage ...ntrol program, will cause Amer...ica to abandon wheat exports next ...ye, Farm Administration officials conceded yesterday.

...t the same time Gov. William T. ...lyers of the Farm Credit Administration returned from an extended Western tour and commended drought damage had not been as severe as generally believed. It would be a "mistake," he declared, to believe the country as whole is "sorely distressed."

...e added it was true crops in ...son States were hard hit, but ...rted in other areas farmers were obtaining good yields and fair pri...

...Withdrawal of the United States fro... world wheat markets, official explained, would be only temporary. They discredited report that America might have difficu... in reclaiming its share of foreign purchases by emphasizing such business always goes to the lowt bidder.

Exports Hit New Low.

...erican wheat exports touched a ...ord low of 35,000,000 bushels last year, after hovering around 1800,000 bushels for a decade. Exrts soared to 335,000,000 in 191 America has been an important factor in the world wheat market since the nineties.

...cials repeatedly have pointed out he drought would have been ...v a more severe blow to farmers except for millions of dollars in benefit checks paid to growers for reducing acreage.

...anwhile, the Bureau of Agricultural Economics predicted the country's milk production would decrease until the next pasture season makes available more feed. They said the prices of fluid milk in city distribution would depend to a great extent on prices of butter and milk for manufacturing.

...eed prices in most sections," the report said, "are expected to advance more rapidly than the prices of dairy products during the remainder of this year. The longer outlook is for higher prices of dairy products in relation to prices of feed grains, but a less favorable relationship of dairy products prices to prices of meat animals.

Feed Price Rise Seen.

...Feed shortage, sharply higher feed costs and heavy marketings of cows are expected to reduce considerably the number of milk cows next spring, but the reduced milk production during the remainder of this year is expected to affect supplies of manufactured dairy products more than supplies of milk and cream for city distribution."

The Administration drought relief committee announced appointment of a livestock feed committee, to supervise conservation and distribution of feed in the drought area.

Members named included Keith Southard, of the Federal Surplus Relief Corporation; Lawrence Westbrook, Federal Relief Administration; A. J. Esage and C. R. Arnold, Farm Credit Administration; C. W. Warburton, J. R. Mohler, W. A. Callender, Philip G. Murphy and Calvin Hoover, Department of Agriculture.

Bank Women Meet Here in October

Miss Burwell Announces Association Plans.

The Association of Bank Women will hold its twelfth annual convention here October 22 to 25, Miss S. Winifred Burwell, chairman of the general convention committee and assistant trust officer of the National Metropolitan Bank, announced yesterday.

"Sweeping changes, both in a sociological and economic sense, during the past year have brought to bank women a multitude of fresh opportunities for constructive, intelligent management," said Miss Burwell.

Commenting on the rapidly growing influence of women in the matter of family finance, due to the economic conditions of the past four years, Miss Burwell said the injection of new banking legislation into the picture had still further altered the management problems of women in financial positions.

Veteran Dentist Dies in His Office

Dr. Henry Selby, 59, Suddenly Stricken.

Dr. Henry Selby, 59, dentist, died yesterday of heart disease in his offices at the Medical Science Building.

As he bade a patient good-by, Dr. Selby, a practitioner here for 15 years, slumped to the floor. A physician was summoned, but Dr. Selby already was dead.

The dentist had been under treatment for a heart ailment for the past ten years, friends said. A native of Mississippi, Dr. Selby was a graduate of Vanderbilt University. He lived at 1026 Sixteenth street northwest, was a member of the District of Columbia Dental Society and a Mason.

Dr. Selby is survived by a sister, Mrs. Victor M. Scanlan, of Hattiesburg, Miss.

Maj. William Bowie, left, chief of Division of Geodesy, congratulates August Heim, center, on his retirement after 15 years' service. D. L. Mr. Heim, an instrument maker, was born in Germany and arrived in America as a young man, and came to Washington from Boston.

BUREAU OF PLANT INDUSTRY scientists are now conducting an intensive search at home and abroad for plants that will help control soil erosion and alleviate drought conditions. One party is in Russia and another is in Japan. H. L. Westover and C. R. Enlow will visit Russian Turkenstan, Persia and Afghanistan, looking for all kinds of soil-holding plants which show possibilities for the American plains

BAKER

The Russians, according to Knowles A. Ryerson, bureau chief, have a highly developed program of plant introduction under the direction of N. I. Vavilov, who is also head of the Agricultural Academy at Leningrad. A party of Russian horticulturists has been in America since January studying our citrus industry.

The second party of foreign plant explorers, including H. G. MacMillan, a veteran plant explorer, and J. L. Stephens, forage crop specialist, is now in Japan. Frank Meyer, of the bureau, was there many years ago in search of fruits.

Dr. Austin L. Patrick, professor of soil technology and soil technologist of the Pennsylvania State College and Experiment Station, has been appointed a regional director of soil erosion prevention in Pennsylvania. This work will be organized as a cooperative project of the college and the Soil Erosion Service, Interior.

AS leader in charge of the current expedition to the Hingan Mountains and the plains adjoining the Gobi Desert to find superior drought-resisting pasture grasses, the Department of Agriculture is fortunate, believes Secretary Wallace, to obtain the collaboration of Prof. Nicholas Roerich, internationally recognized authority on Central Asia.

For the past 11 years Prof. Roerich has made extensive expeditions into Sikkim, Kashmir, Tibet, Chinese Turkestan, Mongolia, the Gobi Desert and the Altai region, where his exhaustive studies of the scientific and cultural backgrounds of the entire Asiatic field have been second to none. Since 1929 he has also been interested in botanical expeditions into western Tibet, studying especially the medicinal plants of this region.

Accompanying Prof. Roerich are his son, George, an expert on Central Asiatic languages, and H. G. MacMillan and J. L. Stephens, of the Bureau of Plant Industry. Mr. MacMillan and Mr. Stephens are fundamentally trained in the study of American grasses.

"The present so-called political appointees will themselves be helped," says E. Claude Babcock, president of the American Federation of Government Employes, "by protection and extension of the merit system, because history tells us that they will be blanketed into it with their jobs, and thus our efforts for civil service procedure help to give them status, and also to advance the date when they will receive it."

MY DOG STORY

The Post invites its readers to send in their favorite dog stories, accompanied, if possible, by a photograph. The stories should be true ones, and not more than 250 words in length. A weekly prize of $10 will be paid for the best contribution.

By Mrs. T. K. Burroughs, Jr.
(6092 Fifth Street Northwest).

Anyone who has ever loved a dog will understand when I say that I will never forget Peggy, a fox terrier I once had.

One night when Peggy and I were alone, I went upstairs early to read in bed. Over my head was an electric light hanging from the ceiling, and it began to annoy me by shining directly in my eyes. Instead of turning out the light, I put a silk handkerchief around the bulb, moved from under the light as much as possible, and was soon asleep.

When I awoke the room seemed full of people, all trying to talk at once. The room was full of smoke, and my mattress was burned. Peggy was whining and licking her paws.

She had burned them badly putting out the fire on my bed. When the handkerchief had caught fire and fallen on the bed she knew exactly what to do and she did it. The people next door heard her barking and came over to investigate.

We felt as though Peggy reserved a medal, but as she had quite a sweet tooth, she seemed just as well pleased with as much ice cream as one little dog could hold.

By Miss Leota Schwulst
(2707 Thirty-fourth Place Northwest).

I was spending the summer in a cottage 5 miles from Lancurst, a small mountain village, with some friends. My friends had two collies, Rover and Beauty. Beauty had just had a litter of puppies. Rover was very proud. He spent most of the day running from the cottage to the woodshed, where Beauty was staying.

When the puppies were three days old Rover disappeared. After a fruitless search we sent a man to the village with a notice offering a reward for the return of Rover. The man came back with the news that four dogs in the village had disappeared, too. (The four dogs were collies.) Early the next morning Rover appeared, followed by four other dogs. They were collies. Rover proudly led them to the woodshed, where they looked at the puppies and rested. They then left.

By W. B. Loving,
(Greenwood, Va.)

When I was a boy on the farm we had two dogs, named Guess and Guard, and both were dangerous when allowed to run free. Guess was smaller than Guard, more vicious and not so easily managed, but I had them under fairly good control. There was a strong fence inclosing the yard and the dogs could not get out when the gate was closed.

One summer day I was standing in front of the house when I saw a neighbor coming, and only a short distance from the gate, which happened to be open. The man called to me and wanted to know where the dogs were. I told him to come on and I would look out for the dogs.

Just then the dogs came running around the house, barking furiously. I called to them to stop and Guard stopped immediately, but Guess, a little way behind, kept running. Guard was watching him, and just as Guess was passing Guard sprang at him, caught him by the ear and pulled him back, as much as to say: "Didn't you hear the order to stop? Why didn't you stop?"

I know this may seem like a "fairy tale," but it actually occurred.

Governor Bryan Denies Senate Nominee Aid

Lincoln, Nebr., Aug. 17 (U.P.).—Charles W. Bryan, defeated by Representative Edward Burke for the Democratic Senatorial nomination, indicated today he would not support Burke in the fall campaign. Gov. Bryan, however, refused to discuss reports that he might lead a third party.

His statement concerning his support for the ticket this fall left the way open for a change of sentiment, however. He said he couldn't recall having sent a congratulatory message to Burke.

Washington 'Shivers' As Mercury Hits 66

Washington "shivered" yesterday as the temperature sank to a minimum of 66 degrees at 7 a. m., and climbed slowly, reaching 70 at noon, and attaining a maximum of 74 at 2 p. m.

Rain threatened throughout the day, and the city was overcast by clouds and cloaked in a gray mist much of the day.

Today will be fair and warmer, with the mercury nearer normal August readings, the Weather Bureau predicted last night.

Through Eyes of Amos

Ellis Declares Modern Ills Are Remarkable Vindication of Foresight of Old Hebrew Prophet Who Lived Many Centuries Ago.

By William T. Ellis.

Perhaps one reason why I like the stern old farmer-prophet, Amos, of Tekoa, is that I have seen the conditions he pictured and the fulfillment of the principles he laid down. It was my grisly lot, as a war correspondent, to go through four major national revolutions—in Russia, Egypt, Turkey and China. I have seen the high brought low and have given food to impoverished generals and aristocrats who had shortly before dwelt in palaces, lording it over the peasantry. I have seen a ranking ambassador reduced to such dire poverty that in the capital where he once lived in magnificent display he later lived in a single room, supported by his wife's labors.

With my own eyes I saw the rise of the world tide that is now sweeping the whole earth, menacing the old order of privilege. I utterly disapprove of both Communism and Fascism; but I see no workable substitution for them except a Christian democracy, wherein all men will seek first the welfare of the whole body, under the impulsion of Divine law and Christian love. I could join Amos in his denunciation of self-indulgent privileges and power; and, like him, point to an overruling God, whose nature is both justice and love; and who always, ultimately, has His way.

All One Pattern.

All the isolated outbreaks in the world today fit into one pattern, be they national overturns or local strikes. They are violent efforts to achieve social justice and to end manifold oppressions. Their result, ultimately, will either be universal chaos or an intelligent establishment of a brotherly order of society, wherein the strong no longer make the weak to suffer.

Even while the universal mass movement toward a more altruistic and equitable order of life was under way overseas, we in this Western world were witnessing a strange outburst of the contrary spirit. Following the war came the two decades of "self-expression," "personal liberty" and unbridled egotism. The perpendicular pronoun became the pillar of Baal, at which old and young worshiped. "I want to do it," was exalted as the adequate reason for an orgy of pagan luxury, self-indulgence and carnality.

Professors Scored.

Foolish professors in many colleges—women's colleges especially—and a whole tribe of writers, recklessly threw themselves into the crusade for unrestrained individualism, and for the flouting of all the accepted verities of custom and religion. Young women, thinking they were "modern," revived the ancient Oriental practices which were in vogue at Ur of the Chaldees 6,000 years ago, of painting their lips and cheeks and eyebrows and finger nails. Chastity, in certain circles, became a despised word.

What happened was all charted by lonely old Amos. Repudiated moral laws exacted their toll. The depression came like a holocaust, caused directly and wholly by stupid, blind selfishness. The great schoolmaster took the disobedient pupils into the woodshed for a chastening. Whether the lesson was learned remains to be seen.

Nazis an Example.

After only a year, Hitler found his Nazis rotten at the top—morally, as well as politically, rotten. Their shameless self-indulgence had degenerated into the bestial habits of the ancient cities which the fire of God's wrath had destroyed. Moral decay always follows unbridled self-pleasing. The pattern outlined by Amos proved true in Germany, as everywhere. Society always decays at the top; the saving health of the body politic has ever been the sturdy morality, integrity and religion of the plain people.

The news columns have told, by reports of official records, of the shameless greed and predatory criminality of eminent men who once had been regarded as leaders in the business world. Not a line has been lacking to fulfill the Amos picture.

Why can not the financial magnates, whose vast fortunes have certainly not brought them happiness, perceive the beauty of brotherliness and the real prosperity that resides in the common welfare of the whole body of society? Really, the stupidity of the rich exceeds their wickedness. Small wonder that Amos heaped scorn upon these blind flouters of righteousness.

The Inner Worm.

Like a worm that eats the heart of supporting timbers, the real evil of the conditions portrayed by the old Hebrew prophet is the spiritual blindness of those who have ransacked the world for means of catering to their own fleshly desires. Worse than the deterioration and disintegration of both the letter and the spirit of revealed religion, it is utter defiance of the clear teachings of both the Old and New Testaments. It directly counters everything that Jesus stood for. It is the supreme heresy. The "mark of the beast" is No. 1.

Our greatest present need is for an Amos, a Savonarola, a St. Francis, a Luther, a Knox, a Wesley, to call in trumpet tones our times to a realization of true welfare. The Methodist movement among the common people saved England from revolution. Only applied Christianity can make a success of the New Deal and the New Day, and all the other formulas for a fairer world.

Schick Accepts District Chest Meetings Post

Incumbent Last Year to Serve Again; "Speech Clinic" Planned.

James P. Schick has accepted the chairmanship of the Community Chest Meetings Committee, it was announced yesterday by H. L. Rust, jr., campaign chairman. Mr. Schick served in the same capacity last year.

At the same time it was announced that the next meeting of the Chest "Speech Clinic" will be held at Holiday House on Mount Vernon highway Wednesday night. The meeting will include a general discussion of plans for the Speakers Division, of which J. C. Martin is chairman.

Although the "open house" meeting at Camp Good Will last week was rained out, Laurence E. Rubel, publicity chairman, is making plans for another such affair next month.

Just what chest agency will be thrown open for the public this time has not been decided, but it will be where the public can be accommodated rain or shine, Rubel said.

"We feel that these "open house" meetings form the best possible way of acquainting contributors with the manner in which their contributions are spent," Rubel said.

Chairman Rust yesterday expressed gratification at obtaining the services of Mr. Schick as chairman of the meetings committee. This committee makes arrangements for all meetings held during the Chest campaign and also has charge of the entertainment of any special guests or speakers at these meetings.

They Also Serve.

It is curious how every age, considering its predecessor drippingly romantic, likes to consider itself an era of hard-bitten realism—and is generally wrong. Even Kipling could confute his epoch only by transferring romance to mechanics—and then along came Conrad, not to mention Anthony Adverse. Our own times, we are told, find constancy old-fashioned and outmoded. But consider the story of Robert N. Bechtel, resident buyer for New York department stores.

Thrice every day for 20 years, Mr. Bechtel—a temperate man in everything except constancy—has toasted an alleged portrait of Mme. Pompadour which enhanced, if it did not decorate, the dining room of a well-known Manhattan hotel. Once every day for that score of years—in prosperity and in depression—Mr. Bechtel asked the hotel manager to sell him the painting. The mistress of Louis XV smiled unswerving encouragement. The manager of the hotel frowned unvarying refusal. Yet the faithful swain persisted and has at last gained his reward. The dining room is being redecorated and the alluring portrait of La Pompadour has passed to Mr. Bechtel.

History whispers that the original Pompadour's admirable qualities were not precisely overwhelming. Art suggests that the Martinique "portrait" of the lady harmonized nicely with the hotel's mutton chops. The painting may be no likeness; it very likely idealizes a very horrid hussy. But who would raise these objections when we know that its glamour appealed both to "Diamond Jim" Brady and "Bet-a-Million" Gates?

The romantic soul of our realistic era is touched. The hard-boiled press of Manhattan quivers. Journeys today are likely to end in code authority meetings. But a constant lover still has some chance, provided he simply sits still long enough.

Salutary For The State.

Picketing has become a national pastime. Long used by the laborer it has now been taken over by the consumer and in New York's Bronx, at least, with full sanction of the court.

Citizens living in that vast region decided that certain bakers were charging too much for their bread. Having no other means at hand to make known their protests, they began marching up and down in front of the offending bakeries. Instead of saying that this firm was unfair to organized labor, they chanted against eight-cent bread.

The bakers went to court, seeking an injunction. Judge Samuel H. Hofstadter, of the Supreme Court, listened to both sides and said: "I conceive that it is clear in reason and principle that picketing not accompanied 'by violence, threats, or intimidation, expressed or implied,' and having a lawful purpose, should not be enjoined. The right of an individual or group of individuals to protest in a peaceable manner against injustice or oppression, fancied or actual, is one to be cherished and not to be proscribed in well-ordered society. It is an essential prerogative of free men living under democratic institutions, and it is salutary for the State in that it serves as a safety valve in times of stress and strain."

That is a wise decision. It is an expression of real Americanism too often lost sight of in these days. In short, Judge Hofstadter's words are a pleasant addition to the literature of this stormy period of our history.

East Is West.

Despite the existence of several good periodicals interpreting the Far East for American readers, there is doubtless room for one more. Orient, under the editorial direction of veteran Charles Edward Russell, now makes its initial bow, and proves anew our national interest in Asia.

Orient is well written and well "made." Its first manifestation displays some loose proofreading, but that is a fault common to magazine-youth, of which we should perhaps be the last to complain. The stated purpose of the new monthly is to show "the new day in an old world," to bring home to the Occident the political, social and economic changes now occurring in the Far East. Two quotations will help to demonstrate the newcomer's policies:

"The recognition of Manchukuo as an independent power to which we can send a minister plenipotentiary would manifestly be acknowledgment of the truth of a pure fiction and would be very difficult for the United States or any other self-respecting power."

"To give independence to the Philippine Islands is a kindly gesture which will commend itself to a majority of the American people. But the separation must be complete."

As Orient comes on the stage a more crusading journal passes off. Many who have had little sympathy with its rather extreme viewpoint will regret the demise of the World Tomorrow, founded by Norman Thomas. But its energetic spirit may survive in the Christian Century, with which the religio-social weekly is now merging.

Reason For Apprehension.

Senator La Follette, in announcing his platform for re-election in Wisconsin, has put into clear and unmistakable terms that punitive attitude toward business which is one of the most curious of our current psychological problems. His program, indeed, is one which seems calculated to cause the Administration, so benevolent to his candidacy, considerable concern.

By the Administration, a distinction between constructive and destructive business is still recognized. Men are not yet regarded by it as essentially evil merely because they have chosen to enter the walks of trade. But Senator La Follette seemingly has little sympathy with the President's assurance, in his speech at Green Bay, that "this Government intends no injury to honest business." It would seem that this entire class in our society has his disapproval.

The Senator's platform makes it difficult to draw any other conclusion. "The farmer," he says, "is entitled to a profit on his investment above the cost of production." For labor, he says, "there must be shorter hours, a shorter week and wages which will give a comfortable life." But when we turn to business we read that "our industrial plants should not be used solely for profit, but primarily to provide useful employment for those willing to work. * * *"

Few will quarrel with the assertion that industry does not exist solely to make profits. But every fair-minded person will, on grounds of equity alone, question why the farmer is entitled to a profit, why labor should be guaranteed "a comfortable life," if the role allotted to business is to be entirely composed of social obligations. The problem of how agriculture and labor can possibly obtain the more abundant life, if business is made the national goat, need not be raised. Enough to point out the inconsistent attitude of the Wisconsin Senator toward one of these three vital elements of our national life.

Senator La Follette mounts this soapbox platform at a time when the Administration is in many ways showing its concern over the failure of the capital goods industries to exhibit symptoms of recovery. Activity in these industries has always in the past been a condition precedent to recovery. Indeed, nobody in Washington expects any fundamental recovery now until this basic form of business picks up. Everyone in a key position here knows that a widespread feeling of apprehension, which the President has so far tried vainly to exorcize, is delaying recovery.

Business, large and small, throughout the country is today apprehensive over the future of the currency, over the large and increasing burden of public expenditures, over the heavy taxation which this implies, over the growing complexity of Government regulation, and perhaps particularly over the latent threat to penalize ability and application. The hopes and fears of business men are vital factors in any recovery program. And today fear rather than hope is predominant.

Statistics, charts and graphs show certain signs of encouragement. But such data neglect the fundamental psychological factor of business confidence about the future. "There is no lack of confidence," said the President at Green Bay, "on the part of those business men * * * who clearly read the signs of the times." But one of the signs of the times is Senator La Follette's "New Deal" program. There is little encouragement for business, large or small, in that. There is little assurance for that promotion of activity in capital goods which the Administration is properly anxious to see achieved.

The "Colonial Ministry."

Great possibilities await the newly created Division of Territories and Island Possessions, under the Department of the Interior, which Dr. Ernest H. Gruening has been chosen to direct. Although we have possessed territory of a colonial status for many years, much of it has never been placed under centralized civilian administration. Now, with the exception of the Canal Zone and our possessions in the Midway Islands of the Pacific (each considered a military outpost), all this territory has been placed under the Secretary of the Interior, with a specialized director in immediate control of our relations with the dependencies.

If this policy works as well as its protagonists hope, its inception may well stand as one of the notable achievements of the present Administration. It is not merely administratively sound, but also a pleasant admission that an imperial nation owes a high sense of responsibility to its wards.

Dr. Gruening, who has spent many years fighting for just such an attitude on the part of the United States, is well cast for this important post. He goes to his job not only with knowledge of conditions in the regions under his supervision, but also with the friendship of their inhabitants. There is something appropriate in the fact that his appointment came but a day after the last Marine left Haiti, for he has done much to demonstrate the ability of subject races for self-government which that evacuation is aimed to forward.

In Louisiana.

The issues behind the strange legislative fiasco at Baton Rouge are too numerous and important to be ignored by the world away from the swampy parishes and the crippled city of New Orleans. They are intertwined with the stark economic conditions of the South, where poverty and peonage still rule thousands. They happen to be a particularly ludicrous manifestation of what occurs when a State, through ignorance and inertia, allows a demagogue to assume powers for the purpose of self-aggrandizement.

Fortunately for Louisiana, Senator Long's legislative program has not yet become law and if enough opposition to it can not be aroused in the Senate there still remain the courts. These, in all probability, will be forced to find a great part of this new legislation at variance with Constitutional provisions. After all, a legislature can not vote away the rights guaranteed by that document.

In all likelihood Louisiana will find its way out of the political mess into which it has let itself flounder. Thus far the State's dignity has been the worst sufferer from the proceedings. But should they become law the cost of the special session will make itself felt far and wide in the State. However, bills which seem to have as their chief objective the coercion of local government units are so obviously against the public interest that a reaction can not be long delayed.

The Better Way.

The strike in the cotton-textile industry authorized by the United Textile Workers apparently has as its chief objective recognition of that organization as the accredited representative of the employes. It is charged that employer intimidation and interference have prevented the workers from enjoying the rights of free bargaining, through representatives of their own choosing assured under section 7 (a) of the recovery act. Hence the union proposes to resort to direct action to force abolition of company unions, in addition to demanding shorter hours and higher rates of pay.

Since the union is without funds to support the workers during a period of voluntary idleness, the decision to strike seems dubious strategy. The textile mills might easily decide to close down in case of a walkout. In any case, correct interpretation and fair enforcement of section 7 (a) will not be furthered by an industrial conflict in which labor's ability to resist the hardships of idleness is pitted against the employers' willingness to endure the losses of a shutdown.

The vague and unsatisfactory character of section 7 (a) is responsible for much of our present labor unrest. The recovery act does not indicate in what way collective bargaining shall be carried on. It does not designate any special kind of organization to represent workers. Nor does it provide any means for guaranteeing the representative character of the bargaining agency. So the only way to settle the differences due to the inadequacies and obscurities of the law is to rely upon impartial interpretation of its intent.

Fortunately, the machinery for determining moot questions and seeing that justice is done to both employers and employes has been set up and is now functioning with increasing effectiveness. If the textile workers are, as alleged, anywhere deprived of the right to be represented by individuals of their own choosing, whether members of a company union or one affiliated with the A. F. of L., they have a peaceable means of securing redress through the National Labor Relations Board.

There is every reason to believe that organized labor will receive a fair deal at the hands of this and other semi-judicial agencies set up to determine its rights. Thus, the special labor relations board for the steel industry has just announced an important ruling that is expected to constitute a precedent in handling disputes under section 7 (a). The decision, which is eminently fair to labor, holds that an employer has no legal interest in the workers' union and denies him the right to demand a list of its members. If, however, the company should maintain that a union does not represent a majority of the employes, the board would undertake to determine the facts by holding an election.

Decisions of this sort are less dramatic, and less subject to emotionalizing and revolutionary agitation, than is the arbitrament of force. It does not follow that they are less helpful than strikes to the prestige and influence of organized labor, let alone other elements in the community.

Plain Pork.

One is inclined more to pity the AAA than to laugh at its latest porcine pickle. How was it to know that there was anything more to Middlesex County than the embattled farmers of history, the rude bridge, and Harvard University? How was it to know that more hogs are raised in the broad fields between the Dunstin House bookshop and the Lowell Mills than in any area of its size in the West?

Such seems to be the case, however, and, according to a news dispatch from Boston, it has cost the AAA exactly $365,000 to find it out. Like Cal Coolidge, the Middlesex farmers were never much for talking and when the depression came they let their cousins out West do all of that. Thus, when the "ploughing under" of pigs was ordered, nobody supposed that the environs of Boston would be a principal beneficiary.

But the silent men of Middlesex, who had fed the hogs and faced bankruptcy, followed the pig reduction program faithfully, like good citizens, and sent in the bill. And the Government, aghast that the piggeries could be so extensive, sent investigators into the territory. Sad-faced they returned. It was so. They raised an awful lot of pigs in Harvard's back yard. One hundred and five Middlesex farmers had "ploughed under" $365,000 worth of pork!

Just what the moral of this may be is rather difficult to determine, unless it be that it sometimes pays to let the other fellow do the hollering.

Are Editorials Coming Back?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have been a constant reader of The Post for over ten years, but it is not until within the past year that I have begun to have much regard for its editorial policies. It may be that editorials do not have the weight and authority that they had in the days of Greeley or of Dana; but now and then one likes to scan the editorial columns to find out the editors' reactions to the events of the day. It is gratifying to find on the editorial page of The Post well-reasoned expressions of opinion instead of dogmatic, rabid utterances against this and that or pusillanimous acquiescence in things done by the powers that be.

I particularly refer to your splendid editorial of August 10, headed, "No Room for Radicalism?" and also the editorials of August 11 with the titles, "Undiscriminating Criticism" and "Those Who Will Pay."

The Post has improved in many respects and no small portion of this improvement is shared by the editorial page. H. C. ANDERSON.

The Bank of Issue.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Senator Borah is obviously going to force the hand of the New Deal on its program for a sound and adequate currency. He is not going to permit a reversion to the old deal of the money-changers who, faced with the failure of credit, propose only the lending of more money (Cf. Senate 2766, approved March 6, 1934). The President will be compelled to resolve the confusion of thought to which he referred after abandoning the Warren plan, or let Mr. Borah try it.

To both these gentlemen let us commend for consideration the ideas of Dr. Frederick Soddy, of Oxford, and suggest that the needed reform does not consist in turning our present evil system of lending new money into use over to the Government through a public bank of issue. This does not change the system, but only assures a new emphasis on the political evils of manipulating these "loans."

The "bank of issue" should be the public budget—local, State and National—so that new money is earned, not loaned, into use. Money should then be retired by taxes on the theory, not of a balanced budget, but of a balanced price level, i. e., stability in the money cost of necessities.

MONEY CHANGER.

Tax and Bootleg.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It does not require much common sense or judgment to see that as long as bootleggers can profit by plying their trade, they will continue to do so. Make it unprofitable for them and they will soon cease. Just as long as the Government keeps such a high tax on liquor, there will be plenty of bootleggers and less tax money for the Government. All through what was called prohibition the Government used considerable money trying to stop bootlegging, but it was not stopped. The Government seemed to exist all through what was called prohibition without any tax on liquors, and it also did before the rebellion, and taxes were not as high as they are now.

Old Cards and New Deals.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your editorial page of August 8 was a real feast. I quote outstanding passages from two. In "A Politician Passes," speaking of Vare, you say, "He lost his power in one of those ballot box upheavals which are more spasmodic than final, which are evidences of intermittent reformist fever rather than of reestablished political health." And from "The American Dream"—"Once let the State adopt the easy course of crushing its real leaders to satisfy the mob and the collapse of that particular civilization will quickly follow."

The Literary Digest "New Deal" poll shows how rapidly sentiment is turning against the Administration, for it has been pointed out that if this poll had been taken a few months back the vote would have been possibly 10 to 1 instead of about 2 to 1 for the "New Deal."

A Parting Guest.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Washington is a city one doesn't want to leave, as I shall have to do in a few days. It seems to have a small-town atmosphere with big things in it.

I thought I would see everything at least twice while here, but I haven't made a beginning on many things. One reason is that I keep going back to the same places—the Library of Congress, Corcoran Art Gallery, but best of all, Lincoln's Monument. I consider this, of all the splendid things in Washington, as the best—the very essence of Greek art—"sincerity, simplicity and consistency," with a complete absence of our modern utilitarianism. I am so glad it hasn't been made to be used for something.

So I will leave Washington with regret, but I am coming back some time. LAURANNE.
Washington, Aug. 11.

Thank You!

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: This organization is deeply grateful for the presence of photographers and city men at the ceremony incident to the dedication of this newly acquired building on the afternoon of August 9. It was perhaps not a cataclysmic event of National importance, but it was of deep emotional importance to us, and we do thank you for the manner in which you handled it.

Please rest assured that your representatives are always welcome in these headquarters.

The Fire Opal Lily.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Resting upon the water of a pool in the garden are a score of leaves of the fire opal lily, some of them nearly a foot in diameter, the smallest barely an inch. At irregular intervals a stalk, pointed with a bud, thrusts its way between the leaves, and during one day it grows to the height of 2 inches above the water.

Late on the morning of the second day, the bud opens and a lily of the exquisite coloring from which the plant derives its name, remains on view until soon after noon, when the petals close and the stalk again is tipped with a bud. Next day, the performance is repeated, the fire opal lily showing itself for four hours, then becomes a bud once more. And on the third day the pool is beautified even as it had been before. But now the end has come. Always on this third day, after the flower closes, the stalk commences to droop, and next morning it may be seen several inches beneath the surface.

How like is the life of man.

He blossoms forth as a child, then timidly retires until he finds his bearings at school. Now his petals are spread proudly until he crosses the threshold into business life, where he again hesitates until he becomes master of self and circumstances. From that day forward the fire of the opal should be his until the hour when the petals close forever, and the stalk, tipped with its lifeless bud, sinks from sight.

Is No News Good News?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: For years I have taken The Washington Post, but during all that time I have noticed one thing which I do not like, and it is that you leave out all the news which concerns the politicians and which they do not want published over here in Arlington County. Is your man over here working for you or for them?

This condition is commented on by many people, and does not do your paper any good, for we never know when some important news is going to break, and we feel that it will not be carried by your paper if it concerns the politicians.

Mr. Knott Is Duly Corrected on Hitler

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I feel that I should come to the defense of The Post to challenge the letter "Intolerant Toward Hitler?" which appeared in The Post August 9, signed by J. O. Knott.

Either by design or lack of information Mr. Knott tells us in all seriousness that Hitler "acted under the highest authority now in Germany." He neglects to state that that authority is Hitler. Hindenburg's only part in the whole affair ended when he appointed Hitler Chancellor in January.

As to Hitler's being the choice of the German people by their full consent by an almost unanimous voice, the statement sounds ridiculous to one who is in possession of facts and figures.

After seizing control of all sources of public information and propaganda — radio, press, telegraph, and by abolishing the newspapers of all opposing parties, imprisoning and killing their leaders, intimidating their followers and banning their meetings, Hitler's party considered itself ready to have such part of the German people who had any courage or hope left go to the polls. Thus did the National-Socialist party of Germany, with the German Nationalist party as its ally, eke out a majority vote of less than 53 per cent.

Some figures follow (March 5, 1933):

20th District: Cologne-Aachen:

	Votes.
Nationalists	74,921
National-Socialists	396,216
Social-Democrats	158,736
Communists	188,051
Central Party	472,824
Others	27,238

3rd District: Potsdam II:

Nationalists	177,605
National-Socialists	485,164
Social-Democrats	260,977
Communists	225,490
Central Party	65,727
Others	53,856

I have in my possession all of the figures published by the Deutsch-nationales Kampfblatt, but I believe those given above will give evidence that Hitler and his party were by no means the unanimous choice of the German people.

The election was a farce. And the election of August 19 will be even more farcical.

The Post Impressionist

Yellow And Green.

Postoffice, Saturday.

"THOUSANDS of people rellgious, beauty-loving and epicurean—hope that the Isere Socialist Deputy's petition to the President of France will be granted, and that the exiled Carthusian monks will be permitted to return to their order's motherhouse at La Grande Chartreuse."

Thus, in effect, our esteemed newspaper the other day editorialized.

Now, the Post-Impressionist is too meek to call himself religious, too modest to describe himself as a beauty-lover, and he does not and never has loved liqueurs. But he is commonplace enough to be one of thousands, and to that devout hope adumbrated by The Post editorial he adds a pious "Amen."

* * *

Once two people that he knew better than he ever knew anybody else—oh, ever so long ago—visited St. Pierre de Chartreuse . . .

That Pair of Persons imbedded vicariously to the top of the 3,000-foot height. At least, they were toilsomely drawn thither by a pair of horses which appeared to predate the monastery. Nor was theirs a private conveyance. Its long seats faced each other, and the pair, sitting close together, faced a fat woman who nursed two descent hens in her lap and—as far as he could get from her—a mean man, wearing a shabby cassock and shovel-hat, from whose sway face projected a long, sharp nose that sniffed, not always too successfully, at a chronic cold.

"Oh, yes," said he, "I know about the liqueur Chartreuse! Muncle was a member of the Community and technical director of the distillation . . ."

Said this long-nosed man with the chronic cold:

"Of course, my uncle had small knowledge of the recipe's ingredients. Those formed a secret, as such a secret that no single individual was intrusted with its entirety. The Sixteen Hundreds the Marechal d'Estrees gave his then simple recipe to the Order. But thereafter Apothecary-Brother Come Maubec, and doubtless others improved thereon—oh, complicedly improved! And finally its intricate composition was intrusted to several brothers, each guarding his special knowledge from his collaborators, and each transmitting it only to his successor.

"However, I can tell you this—the long-nosed man concluded: the liqueur, whether the yellow or the green, should be made from certain herbs that grow nowhere precisely right except on these slopes. That being thus, and only certain members of the Community knowing in combination, what to do with these herbs, why, my Faith, it is evident that, on the one hand, they cannot confect the traditional chartreuse in their exile, and that, on the other hand, nobody else can confect it here!"

The Two Persons looked at each other. They had not been doing much else, anyhow; but this time one of them sighed. Certainly she had hoped to find some tiny flagon of the veritable liqueur obtainable about those deserted precincts above.

Then, having again looked at each other, the Two Persons looked out over the green mountainside, out at the waves of mountains which descended into green hills, out at a view that was almost as satisfactory—but not quite so satisfactory—as those nearer and more intimate views these Two Persons had been taking . . .

"Behold, we are arrived!"

And there they were, at the chateau, at the monastery . . .

Those "high roofs of black slate, that leaping clock-tower and those Cross-topped turrets" brought back to the Two Persons the cowled figure of St. Bruno of Cologne, the erect figure of St. Hugh of Lincoln—yet more by contrast of past with present than by any similarity of what the visitors saw with what they had read in their histories. Nothing is so unlike a great man's home, or a church, or a monastery, as a home, church or monastery that some government or memorial organization has shifted from the purpose for which the place was built and converted (not to say "restored" or "preserved") into what is called "a national monument." The shell was here at the Grande Chartreuse, undeniably beautiful. But the yolk was missing.

And the shell was already beginning to crack . . .

"Well," said one of the Two Persons, "we didn't find any real chartreuse."

He was sorry. Like the Post-Impressionist, he didn't care for liqueurs himself. Nevertheless, those were days when he could guess his companion's wants and tried to supply them—more ardently than he tried though aftertime.

And then, as so often in the aftertime, his companion said: "It doesn't matter."

She said that she would really enjoy some of the modern liqueur, down there at the little railroad cafe in the valley.

It doesn't matter!

Well, probably it didn't. Those Two Persons were happy, anyhow . . .

We wonder what's become of them . . .

But we pray everything that's good for St. Pierre de Chartreuse.

Barging Through Europe With Carlisle Bargeron

Viva La France!

HAVRE, France, Dear Aleck: Three reasons have been given to me, Aleck, for one to stay up all night as the boat comes into port. The one given by the experienced travelers is that it is so fascinating to see the rotund little French pilot climb up the rope ladder at 4 o'clock in the morning with his profusion of "bon jours." The second given unabashedly by those on their first transatlantic trip is that they can't wait a minute to see some Frenchmen, while the third reason of staying up is to get tight. The point is, Aleck, that everybody stays up.

BARGERON.

We move slowly through a procession of blinking harbor lights while the town looms forth on a promontory to the port. It is an excellent harbor built, as the fellow leaning over the rail next to me observes, with surplus American war materials. "And just to think they won't pay us," he comments ruefully. A Frenchman gives his opinion and a war debt controversy is just averted.

• • • •

There is the Leviathan, Aleck, fully lighted and only in port two hours before and its passengers still aboard. There is plenty of gayety going on, too. A passenger, whom I subsequently met, told me that the Leviathan brought over less than 300 first-class passengers, of whom less than 100 were men. I gather, Aleck, that the women are doing all they can to keep the pride of the American merchant marine on the high seas, but without success. She is to be tied up for good after a few more trips. She is a beautiful thing tied up to the dock there, the music from her orchestra wafting out over the water.

A few minutes later and the Pennland, westward bound, is tied up between us and the Leviathan with a navigation skill that only a thrifty French pilot could accomplish. Our captain had called out quietly from the bridge when he realized what was up:

"How in the hell do you expect to get her in there—with a shoe horn?"

"Oui, Monsieur," quietly responded the French pilot.

• • • •

Upon debarkation about 9 o'clock, Aleck, our passengers are lost in the swank of those of the Leviathan. I'm glad I'm going on and not getting off. A splendidly equipped boat train is down from Paris to meet the Leviathan, the cars marked "United States Lines." As she moves slowly off I declare I believe I see George Marshall, Washington's man about town, laundry proprietor and newspaper publisher. If it was George then a good time really was had aboard the Leviathan.

We Hamburg passengers aboard the City of Havre get landing passes and go into town. And almost provoke an international conflict immediately.

A crowd of us aboard have been in the habit of singing "Ein Prosit" at the least suggestion or anyway, after a few beers. It's got to be the theme song of the boat.

• • • •

Often, Aeck, everybody would be seated at dinner and we would start singing "Ein Prosit." We were more fun. The passengers would laugh until they nearly died and inasmuch as they did that every time we sang "Ein Prosit" you can imagine how nearly dead they are by now.

Well, anyway, we went up into town and sought out a cafe with a view of partaking of some of the wine of La Belle France. Without any of us thinking about it, the German fellow with us began singing "Ein Prosit" and we all lifted our glasses and joined in. I suppose it would have caused enough commotion had there just been Americans carrying on like this, but with the German leading it was too much for the French hospitality. There was such purple expostulation as I never heard in a foreign language before, accompanied promptly by the arrival of three gendarmes, whether by design or accident.

• • • •

We came giggling back to the boat pronto or as the French would say "tout de suite." Beneath my apparent recklessness, Aleck, is a conservative streak and I am sort of glad that the next place we sing "Ein Prosit" in will be Germany. It maybe though, Aleck, that then the Germans will think that because of my French mustache I am trying to insult them, when the plain fact is that anybody who knows me, knows that I haven't got an insult in my body. I am just good, clean fun.

Winchester Man Is Found Shot

Winchester, Va., Aug. 17 (Spl.).—Jacob Coffman, 33, filling station operator, was in a critical condition at Memorial Hospital tonight suffering from a bullet wound in his head which, police say, was self-inflicted.

Coffman allegedly shot himself shortly before noon today with a rifle while standing at the top of a flight of attic steps. An hour later he was found unconscious by Clifton Emory, beer-truck driver, who searched the place for the proprietor after his calls were not answered.

Officers said they found a note Coffman left his wife, Mrs. Harriett Seabright Coffman, in which he told his friends good-by and asked his wife to go to the home of his mother, Mrs. G. C. Gochenour, near Woodstock, to live. Police said marital troubles were believed to have caused the act.

The National Gallery

LEONARD DUPEE WHITE, Civil Service Commissioner. Appointed to the commission at the behest of Secretary Ickes. A Republican and a Progressive, he taught political science at both Dartmouth College, of which he is a graduate, and the University of Chicago. Special investigator for the National Research Council, 1923-1925, he was also the principal investigator for the Hoover Commission on Social Trends. Energetic, he boasts a mean backhand at tennis and an occasional "strike" at bowling. Short, slight, of medium build, he peers from beneath goggles with kindly gray eyes.

Such a large proportion of those who have been pictured by Mr. Robles have asked for the originals that The Washington Post is saving all these drawings to honor the requests of any future members of "The National Gallery."

Another Letter From a Bald-Headed Dad to His Daughter

By Robert Quillen.

My dear Louise:

I wasn't surprised when you came home full of praise for Ethel's town and the charming people there.

Every time you go a-visiting in some other town, you think the place superior to your own village—especially if it is larger. And you are convinced that life in any one of these places would be richer, more entertaining and happier.

Here at home there is nothing to do, and only in some other and larger town can you hope to find opportunity.

Don't think I am criticizing. All youngsters worth their salt feel that way. I did at your age, and so did all of my friends. It is one of nature's shrewd little tricks to perserve the race.

If all people were home bodies, without any urge to travel, everybody would huddle in one spot and live in want while continents remained undeveloped and families would intermarry until the race petered out.

To prevent that tragedy, nature makes the hills look green far away. The boy or girl from another town is more attractive than the ones here at home. Half the married women here in the village, as you know, came here from other towns to teach school.

All our ambitious youngsters are eager to get away to some place of greater opportunity, for they don't realize that nature is tricking them.

But opportunity isn't in some other place, my dear. In every town that seems wonderful to you there are thousands of girls and boys who dream of getting away from the lousy place so they can be somebody.

It is true that one must take a talent to the best market, as in selling any other commodity, but opportunity is where you make it and the size of the market doesn't make a poor article good.

Eventually, no matter where you go, you must follow the age-old rule, Do the best you can, with what you have, where you are.

And the sooner you get at it, the less heart-ache you will have to endure before learning wisdom.

Love, DAD.

Ouster Reply Denies Politics

Council Answers Police Mandamus Action in Frostburg.

Frostburg, Md., Aug. 17 (Spl.).—Political patronage played no part in the dismissal of two Frostburg police officers, according to an answer filed yesterday in Circuit Court by the mayor and town council following mandamus proceedings instituted last week by the ousted officials, Benjamin Thomas, former acting chief, and Ronald Kreider, former assistant chief.

Edward J. Ryan, city attorney, filed the answer. The petition of Thomas and Kreider named the mayor and council and August Sweitzer and Harry Fuller, as defendants. Sweitzer and Fuller were appointed to replace Thomas and Kreider.

The civil service commission of the town held examinations to determine candidates eligible for police appointments, Ryan said. The answer cited that the appointments of Kreider and Thomas were not confirmed by the council under the provisions of an ordinance passed in 1928, which provides that all police department appointments were to be for a six-month period of probation, at the expiration of which the council could remove any member of the force or confirm any appointments previously made.

Sweitzer and Fuller were appointed for six months' probation, the attorney contended, and the appointments of Thomas and Kreider were rejected.

Sweitzer and Fuller were selected from among a number of eligible citizens who took the police examination, the answer stated.

Virginia Guard Honors Governor

Peery Gets Distinguished Service Medal at Camp.

Virginia Beach, Va., Aug. 17 (AP).—George Campbell Peery, Governor of Virginia and ex-officio commander in chief of the State's military organization, reviewed two organizations of the Virginia National Guard today and then received the State's medal for distinguished service at the camp of the Ninety-first Brigade here.

The Governor and his party, which included Attorney General A. P. Staples and Comptroller E. R. Combs, arrived by automobile from Richmond this morning. They went first to Fortress Monroe, where the 246th Coast Artillery Regiment is undergoing its annual training period. Joined by Brig. Gen. S. Gardner Waller, the Governor took the salute as the artillerymen paraded.

Then, accompanied by Gen. Waller, the party proceeded to the camp here, which has been named Camp Peery in the Governor's honor. With the party was Maj. Gen. Paul B. Malone, commanding officer of the Third Corps Area. As he arrived at Camp Peery, the Governor was greeted with a 17-gun salute.

No End of Books

By Theodore Hall

The Wide-Open Eye.

I'M SURE I'd like to meet Miss Mathilde Eiker, and I'm equally sure that she'd be a most uncomfortable woman to find near. For she resembles her heroine, Avis — so calm and cool that she "ought to have rice and eat it with a needle," whose remark on every inch of life was: "It would be interesting to watch," and whose eyes were sharp, intelligent, and wholly wide open. Like Aldous Huxley with Philip Quarles ("Point Counter Point"), Miss Eiker outlines herself.

THEO. HALL.

Few neater and more rewarding situations could attract the watchful eye than the one in her comedy of manners—"Heirs of Mrs. Willingdon" (Doubleday, Doran, $2). Doughty old Mr. Willingdon had founded his fortune, produced by his first wife, the milk-sop, Ira, and the heir of his spirit, Avis. When his first wife died and he married Julia, dashing and full-blooded widow, the children began their withdrawal. When, after his death, Julia spent five years with a succession of lovers and then devoted ten to a single one, the young Willingdons were not mollified—for the constancy was spent on Mrs. Willingdon's chauffeur.

It was not a spectacle to delight or be understood by Ira or Avis when their stepmother "held hands with her chauffeur with one hand and thumbed her nose at the world with the other." Mrs. Willingdon might have the income of the estate; nevertheless she was "sent to Coventry."

• • • •

But all this is antecedent to the tale, which opens with Mrs. Willingdon's death notice in the paper. The estate reverted to Avis and Ira. But what to do about such things as silver fox wraps, which Ira's rapacious wife coveted and which the chauffeur's lovely young daughter, Olive, was flaunting in innocence and self-respect? And what to do about the chauffeur himself? And especially what to do when Ira's son fell in love with Olive? Avis was at the heart of all this.

It is, I hope you agree, a pretty kettle of fish. But not one to daunt the sure, deft abilities of Miss Eiker. With the brilliance she showed in such little cherry stones as "The Senator's Lady" and "The Brief Seduction of Eva," she carves her way precisely and delicately through these problems of manners. Much of the time she is talking about her characters—in most novelists a black fault. But here it is not a whit boring. When she comes to a scene, you may expect something as vivid and entertaining as the best of drawing-room plays. And if she just wouldn't use such silly words as "dispatchal" and "levitous," she'd be wholly admirable.

For she has an eye in her head which misses nothing, and the rare gift of telling what she sees with grace and urbanity and common sense.

Alexander Cruden, 1699-1770, was part indefatigable scholar (his the immense "Concordance to the Bible") and part mad and bumptious Anthony Comstock of his era. When he failed in love and in his itch to gain a fashionable place in the world, he took up cudgels and tried to reform London's unsavory morals.

One of England's choice eccentrics, his career has waited for Edith Olivier, author of such engaging novels as "The Love-Child" and "Dwarf's Blood," to treat with sprightly wit and understanding in the pages of "Alexander the Corrector" (Viking Press, $2.50).

• • • •

Anybody who loved as a child that great dog story, "Owd Bob," will pounce swiftly upon Ernest Lewis' "Beth: a Sheep Dog (Dutton, $2). And the next generation might well learn how good a dog story can be. It's about Todhunter, a hunchback, and his amazing but quite credible sheep dog, and their adventures in the English Fells.

Kennelmen rave about the book, and Hugh Walpole went into ecstacies. But as that last is no great feat, perhaps I shouldn't have mentioned it. Anyway, it's a grand book for those people who say: "The more I see of humans, the more I love my dog."

Hilda Faunce and her husband lived at an isolated trading post in the Navajo country for four years, in close sympathy with the Indians. Now, in "Desert Wife" (Little Brown, $3), she writes well of that hard, courageous, and enduring life so alien to the rest of us.

First-rate reading for stay-at-homes, and notably illustrated by W. L. Kihn.

• • • •

Irvin S. Cobb can't let his daughter, Elizabeth, be raking in all the literary fame for the family. So he's gathered 15 of his tales from the past five years, and put them in a volume—"Faith, Hope and Charity" (Bobbs-Merrill, $2).

Here are his moods of humor, of crime-detection, of Southern nostalgia. Old Judge Priest comes on the stage again. Excellent stories by a man who was hard to beat 20 years ago, and just as hard now.

• • • •

Few writers have had a more romantic background than Achmed Abdullah — someday, with more space, I'll report it for you. But now, with my word for it, notice what an ultra-romantic tale such a life can produce. "Never Without You" (Farrar & Rinehart, $2) has all the stock effects, is dashingly incoherent, and yet remains good hammock-reading.

A martinet of a Prussian grand-duchess, her beautiful niece, and a young American music teacher provide the personal conflict and attraction. The war does the rest. If the book doesn't make you squirm, you're sure to be vastly entertained.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

The Mountain Vacationist and the New York Morning Papers.

The morning papers sent up here
Are pretty sad and pretty drear;
The news is scarce (if there is any);
The pages full of miscellany.
The headlines that we see are these:
"Incas Tribes Did Not Eat Peas"—
"Turtles Live to Ripe Old Age"—
"Penguins Capable of Rage"—
"Oldest Elk Is Feeling Well"—
"Bats Build Nest in Ancient Bell."

• • • •

When out of town we're out of touch
With politics, crime news and such,
And so each morn no time we lose
To scan the most impressive news:
"Dandelions Are Good For Blood"—
"Greeks Made Statues Out of Mud"—
"Chinch-bug Is a Hated Pest"—
"Bees Are Photographed at Rest"—
"Henry Clay Liked Black Cigars"—
"Pompeii Had Its Outdoor Bars"—
"Wrens Return to Nest Each Year"—
"How to Paint an Iron Deer"—
"Dandruff Known in Caesar's Day"—
"Fever Germs Are Found in Hay."

• • • •

'Tis sweet in summer when we roam
To get the news each day from home,
And when the papers come you bet
Most thrilling is the news we get:
"Pigeons Molt in Early Spring"—
"Cleopatra Liked To Sing"—
"Indians Made Horse-Hair Beads"—
"Pumpkins Come from Pumpkin Seeds"—
"Rabbit's Tails Are Held for Luck"—
"Water Rolls Right Off a Duck"—
"Parasites Infest String Beans"—
"Worms Are Bad for Putting Greens"—
"Mount McKinley Hard to Climb"—
"Lawns Enriched by Use of Lime"—
"Lincoln Often Wore a Shawl"—
"Pequots Knew the Cougar's Call"—
"Chester Arthur Fond of Grapes"—
"Crullers Come in Funny Shapes."

I wonder what those people who
Are far away from town would do
If big town papers didn't choose
To give them such momentous news.

Mr. Farley Should Do Something.

If the Democrats want to restore confidence they had better do something about getting Babe Ruth to change his mind about retiring at the end of this season.

Cumberland Road Cut-Off Assured

Salisbury, Md., Aug. 17 (Spl.).—Announcement was made yesterday by Harry D. Williar, chief engineer of the Maryland State roads commission, that funds were available and work would start at once to provide Salisbury with the long-promised traffic cut-off on U. S. Highway No. 13.

Purchase of the right of way in Wicomico County from the present highway to the corporate limits is being conducted under the direction of State Senator Milton L. Veasey, of Pocomoke.

When this project is completed, through traffic will be able to avoid the congested downtown area. Chief Engineer Williar said yesterday that the commission had earmarked nine-tenths of the $10,500,000 available for projects which have been already started. The remaining one-tenth, $1,366,000, is to be expended on three new projects, one of which is the cut-off.

Allegany Gets More Cattle For Pasturing

Seven Additional Carloads Arrive From Western Drought Area.

Cumberland, Md., Aug. 17 (Spl.).—More than 300 half-starved cattle from the Middle West are pastured in the green fields of Allegany County, following the arrival of seven additional carloads of live stock purchased by the AAA from farmers of the Western drought area.

Several carloads were sent to Rawlings and placed on the farms of C. E. Heavner, R. L. Miller, C. S. Hansel, G. C. Shoemaker, B. C. Morehouse and Fred G. Alt. One carload was sent to the farm of C. J. White near Ellerslie. Another carload was sent to Midland for the farms of Britt Bucklew and Thomas McFarland, while two carloads were on the farms of Frank Morris, Ambrose Morris and William Spiker, near Mount Savage.

County Farm Agent Ralph F. McHenry said yesterday that 12 more carloads will arrive within the next two weeks. Each car contains 38 beeves. After being fatted for several months, the cattle will be slaughtered and the meat distributed among needy families.

Hagerstown, Md., Aug. 17 (Spl.).—Three carloads of Western cattle from the drought area arrived here yesterday and were sent to two farms.

With heavy rains this week and prospects of improved pastures, applications from Washington County farmers have swamped the office of County Farm Agent Milton D. Moore. Already requests for 1,000 cattle have been received. No applications will be received after Monday.

Covington, Va., Aug. 17 (Spl.).—T. M. Gathright, of this city, has received 300 more cattle from the West for pasture on his lands in Bath County. Approximately 500 head of cattle have been sent to Mr. Gathright for an indefinite stay.

Fishery Chiefs Split on Crabs

Armstrong Answers Earle's Criticism Regarding Spring Season.

Richmond, Aug. 17 (Spl.).—Commenting today on a statement by Swepson Earle, Maryland conservation commissioner, censuring the emergency Virginia legislative act, which permits the taking of sponge, or egg-bearing crabs in April, May and June, Richard Armstrong, commissioner of fisheries of Virginia, said today that the entire subject is being investigated by the Virginia commission.

"We have been investigating this matter for two years in conjunction with the University of Maryland," said Mr. Armstrong, and "We feel that all the facts should be established before we make any recommendation."

"We do not agree with Mr. Earle that a Federal agency should be called on to pass on the matter before the facts are actually established by the survey which is in progress."

Baltimore, Aug. 17 (AP).—Swepson Earle, Maryland conservation commissioner, today censured an emergency Virginia legislative act, which he said permits the taking of egg-bearing crabs in April, May and June.

Earle blamed depletion of the crab supply in Chesapeake Bay, extending along the shores of Virginia and Maryland on the indiscriminate catching of sponge crabs, particularly in the egg-laying season.

He suggested a survey should be made by a Federal agency at once to determine remedial measures.

Ten Face U. S. Liquor Trials

Garrett and Allegany Arrests Recorded at Cumberland.

Cumberland, Md., Aug. 17 (Spl.).—Federal agents in the Garrett-Allegany County territory brought ten persons before United States Commissioner Taylor Morrison here today on charges of violating liquor regulations, and two others were cited to appear.

Clarence M. Morrison, Wellersburg, Pa., near the Maryland line, and Frank P. Mason, Oldtown Road, waived hearings and were held under $2,000 bond on charges of concealing, transporting and possessing untaxed liquor. Federal officers intercepted an automobile in which Morrison and Mason are charged with having transported 65 gallons of liquor. After pouring out the liquor, officers crossed the line into Pennsylvania and confiscated a 200-gallon still, 550 gallons of mash and 10 gallons of liquor at a place allegedly operated by Morrison.

Mary Malozzi, of Cumberland, was arrested at her home, where Federal agents reported they seized 7½ gallons of liquor. Her husband, Pasquale Malozzi, was cited to appear.

The following each were held under $500 bond on liquor charges: Jennie Dekleva, Kitzmiller; Victor and Minnie Tasker, Oakland; William Cutshall, Shellman; Michael Devitt, Oakland; Peter Pratt, Kitzmiller. Adam B. Decost, Deer Park, has been cited to appear.

Socialists Lose In West Virginia

Charleston, W. Va., Aug. 17 (Spl.).—D. Pitt O'Brien, chief clerk in the secretary of State's office, today notified all eight Socialist candidates who filed petitions for places on the November election ballots that they had failed to obtain sufficient signatures and that their names could not be printed.

Mr. O'Brien explained that the petitions required signatures representing one-fifth of the total vote for the office sought at the preceding election. W. E. Amos, of Philippi, nominee for United States Senator, needed 5,531 and filed only 2,715. Mr. O'Brien said, while insufficient signatures were presented by H. L. Franklin, of Fairmont; John C. Chase, of Ridgely; F. E. Davis, of Bristol; J. F. Jeffries, of Ona, and Lee Harper, of Charleston, all candidates for United States Representatives; and C. A. Sparks, of Huntington, and A. S. Cunningham, of Heizer, candidates for State senatorships.

The action means that there will be no Socialist party candidates on the State ballot in November.

Popular Knowledge of Music.

There never was a time when there were so many people, who, without any technical knowledge of the theory of music, without the ability to play any musical instrument, and with only a very little acquaintance with the history of music, were yet eager to know enough about the subject so that they could listen intelligently to an orchestra and understand as well as enjoy grand opera, symphony concerts, and the best piano music. For it is quite possible for anyone, although totally ignorant of the theory of music and of the structure of a symphony and even of the parts played by different instruments, to enjoy the best music that has ever been written.

One's enjoyment will be increased, however, and much of one's curiosity satisfied, if one will read some of the books that have been prepared precisely to fit one's particular necessities.

I should like to recommend a series of 20 little volumes, handy and easy to hold, clearly printed, with about a hundred pages to the volume. This series is called "Fundamentals of Musical Art," and is published by the Caxton Institute, New York. The editor-in-chief is Edward Dickinson, professor emeritus of the History and Criticism of Music at Oberlin. And here are the separate volumes:

1, Introduction to Music. 2, The Folk Song and Dance, and the Voice as a Solo Instrument. 3, The Art Song and Its Composers, where Schubert, Schumann, and others are discussed. 4, The Growth and Use of Harmony. 5, The Art of Listening, where we are told how to listen and what to hear. 6, Choral Music and the Oratorio, where of course, Bach, Handel and Haydn are the main figures. 7, The Music of the Church, describing the Catholic Ritual, Church of England music, the music of the Jewish Syngogue, &c. 8, Great Pianists and Composers. 9, The Organ. 10, The Violin, Cello and String Quartet. 11, Who's Who in the Orchestra. 12, Early and Classic Symphonies. 13, Beethoven and the Romantic Symphony; biography, and description of each of the nine symphonies. 14, Modern Symphonic Forms. 15, Early Italian and French Opera. 16, Modern French and Italian Opera. 17, German and Russian Opera. 18, Modern Tendencies in Music. 19, Music as a Social Force in America. 20, Glossary of Terms and Index.

I have given the titles of all these volumes, because the mere mention of titles is in a way a review of the whole field, and shows how much there is to be learned and how comparatively easy it is to learn it.

NRA Takes Eagle Of Coal Company

Attorney Says Mine to Buyer Plan at Stake.

Baltimore, Aug. 17 (AP).—The right of truckers to bring coal from the Pennsylvania fields and sell it in Baltimore in competition with local dealers was said today to be involved in an NRA order, withdrawing the Blue Eagle from Lord Baltimore Coal Co.

Harry O. Levin, attorney for the company, said charges which resulted in NRA's action were instigated by members of the Baltimore Coal Exchange to halt competition.

Levin asserted the coal company, charged with selling under cost, is "really a brokerage business," and the organization "really concerned" in the matter is the Shamokin (Pa.) Truck Drivers Association. The association was described as a "group of 250 young men," who, unemployed and faced with the prospect of going on Federal relief rolls, arranged to buy coal from the mine owners, truck it to market and sell it themselves.

Levin said they paid $1 a ton for it and sold it here at $9, "cheaper than the members of the Baltimore Coal Exchange can sell it." He said a fight would be made to establish their right to continue this business.

Drunk Driving Arrests Decrease in Baltimore

Baltimore, Aug. 17 (Spl.).—Arrests for drunkenness in Baltimore in the first six months of repeal were fewer than for the same period of 1933, when prohibition was in effect.

The police department announced today there were 1,957 arrests for drunkenness from January 1 to July 1 of this year, compared with 2,061 for this period of 1933. Arrests for all causes were lower this year than last. In the first six months of this year 49,742 persons were arrested, compared with 47,742 for the same period last year.

Cumberland Teacher Dies After Illness

Visitors From Japan Have Busy Day Here

Prince and Princess Kaya See Notable Points of Interest in Capital; Are Honor Guests at Dinner Held in Embassy.

Yesterday, their first day in Washington, was indeed, a very busy one for their Imperial Highnesses Prince and Princess Kaya of Japan. They arrived at the Union Station late Thursday evening and with their retinue were conveyed to the Japanese Embassy in White House cars.

Yesterday morning they were shown a few of the many points of interest in the Capital and while sightseeing they found the road around the Washington Monument blocked off and a repairing job in progress. Undaunted, they walked, like the hoi polloi, up to the edifice and waited their turn with other tourists for the elevator.

"How high?" asked the prince, going up.

"Five hundred fifty-five feet," was the answer.

"Easy to remember!" laughed the princess. "Empire State—this is just the half of it!"

The prince and princess peered out the Monument peep holes and asked questions until they had mastered the lay of the land and water.

Princess Wears Blue.

The princess was costumed in a light blue tailored silk pongee suit, with royal blue velvet beret, and white accessories.

After visiting the Capitol Princess Kaya halted her part of the sightseeing trip at a large department store.

"Her Imperial Highness wants just five minutes here," one of the party told the chauffeur, but she lingered far longer than that.

Straight to the costume jewelry counter she went. Looking for all the world like the "Three Little Maids from School," in the "Mikado," the Princess, her hostess, and her lady in waiting, inched their way along the counter, smiling and chatting and pointing at the pretty baubles in the case.

Buys Bracelet and Necklace.

The Princess purchased a five strand bracelet with gold filigree clasp and necklace to match. She also visited other counters, looking at lace, and after purchasing a double pack of ultra artistic playing cards, returned to the Embassy on Massachusetts avenue.

The Prince continued on his tour of the city, after which he was the guest of honor at the luncheon given by the Acting Secretary of State, Mr. William Phillips, at the Carlton Hotel. The reception room was decorated with baskets of summer blossoms arranged against a background of palms and oak leaves.

Following the brief informal reception the guests wandered into the Patio where luncheon was served. The long table was effectively decorated with three handsome centerpieces of half blown scarlet roses and white astors.

Attend Luncheon.

Those also attending the luncheon were the Secretary of War, Mr. George H. Dern; Senator James P. Pope; Representative Sol Bloom; the Japanese Charge d'Affaires, Mr. Fujii; Mr. William R. Castle, jr., former Ambassador to Japan; the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Col. Henry L. Roosevelt; the Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. R. Walton Moore; the Special Assistant to the Secretary of State, Mr. James Clement Dunn; Brig. Gen. Perry L. Miles; Col. Matsumoto, Japanese Military Attache; Capt. Kayabashi, Japanese Naval Attache; Lieut. Col. Kushibushi, aid to Prince Kaya; Maj. Kanbe; Mr. Takemi, Secretary of Japanese Embassy; Mr. John Barton Payne, Chairman of the American Red Cross; Dr. Stanley K. Hornbeck, Chief of the Far Eastern Affairs; Col. Kenyon A. Joyce, Col. R. L. Collins, Mr. Jefferson Patterson, Mr. Eugene H. Dooman, Lieut. John Weckerling, aid to Prince Kaya, and Lieut. Arthur H. McCollum.

Immediately following luncheon the Prince left for the Navy Yard, where he boarded the Sequoia and cruised down the Potomac to Mount Vernon to pay homage to the first President of the United States. The Presidential yacht made a somewhat speedy return trip up the river, for at 5 o'clock the President was to receive the Prince and Princess. Mrs. Sumner Welles, wife of the Assistant Secretary of State, due to the absence of the First Lady, acted as hostess at tea, which was a delightfully informal affair in the President's study.

Dinner at Embassy.

Last evening the Japanese Embassy was the scene of the dinner in honor of their Imperial Highnesses given by the Charge d'Affaires and Mme. Fujii. The whole of the Embassy was a veritable flower garden. In the grand salon were pastel shaded gladioli which harmonize with the deep red walls and drapes, and in the small salon low baskets of tea roses and silver and green caladium were arranged with the artistry so typical of the Japanese.

The long dinner table in the pale-blue dining room was decorated with three massive centerpieces of yellow gladioli, light and dark-blue delphinium and talisman roses arranged in large silver bowls. Princess Kaya wore a large shoulder corsage of dark purple orchids and her hostess had a corsage of Belmont gardenias.

The dinner guests included the Acting Secretary of State, Mr. William Phillips; the Secretary of War and Mrs. Dern, the Chief of Staff, Gen. Douglas MacArthur; Mr. William R. Castle, jr. the Assistant Secretary of War and Mrs. Woodring, Mr. James Clement Dunn, the Deputy Chief of Staff, Maj. Gen. Hugh A. Drum and Mrs. Drum; the Chief of Cavalry, Maj. Gen. Leon B. Kromer; Dr. Stanley K. Hornbeck, Chief of the Division of Far Eastern Affairs, State Department; Brig. Gen. and Mrs. Perry L. Miles, the Assistant Chief of Staff, Brig. Gen. Alfred T. Smith; Mr. John Barton Payne, Col. and Mrs. Kenyon A. Joyce; Mr. Eugene H. Dooman, the Military Attache of the Japanese Embassy, Col. K. Matsumoto and Mme. Matsumoto; the Naval Attache of the Japanese Embassy, Capt. M. Kobayashi and Mme. Kobayashi; the First Secretary of the Embassy, Mr. T. Miura; Mr. Jefferson Patterson, Assistant Chief of the Division of Protocol, State Department; Lieut. Col. Kushibuchi, aide-de-camp to H. I. H. Prince Kaya; Lieut. John Weckerling, Mr. Clarke Willard, of the Department of State; Mrs. Henry Baxter, and Mme. Matsumura, lady in waiting to H. I. H. Princess Kaya.

Gen. Limon entered the army of the revolution in 1913 as a lieutenant in the forces under Gen. Alvaro Obregon, and continued in these forces until he reached the grade of colonel, after having taken part in many important engagements. During one of the battles Gen. Limon was severely wounded, but remained with his command.

After the beginning of the constitutional period in the Mexican Republic, Gen. Limon was promoted to the grade of brigadier general.

The polo contingent will consist of about 12 grooms and 32 ponies. The ponies will travel via Laredo, Tex., and will be shipped in express cars, insuring a speedy journey East and their safe arrival for the matches.

The officers of the Mexican polo team left Monterey shortly after the departure of their ponies and their arrival in Washington is keenly anticipated by the diplomatic and official sets, who have planned a series of entertainments and receptions in their honor.

The Mexican army polo team will be led by Gen. Limon. In addition, Capt. Alfonso Corona del Rosal will be included in the Mexican party, as will the playing members, Capt. Antonio Navac, Capt. Jesus Gracia, Capt. Juan Reyes, Capt. Antonio Perez and Capt Zabalgoitia.

Culbertson on Bridge

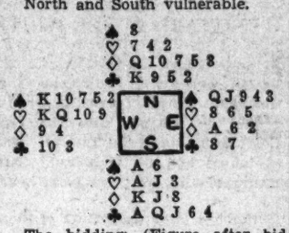
The Bath Coup.

The unknown genius who conceived the idea of joining two hands in common partnership made the greatest discovery in cards. From this basic theme was born the game of Whist and its derivatives, one of which is the now universally popular game of Contract Bridge. The conception of the partnership feature added several phases to the game, which make it far more intellectual—far more a battle of wits. Among the features necessary to a partnership game is the necessity for maintaining entries, known in the Culbertson system of play as communication plays. Since it is so important to each team to keep their lines of communication open, it becomes proportionately valuable to the other side to kill what opposing entries they can.

One of the simplest entry-killing plays is known as the Bath Coup. Named for the famous English winter resort, Bath, this play was used by the young English blades of the early nineteenth century who loved to gamble for large sums at Whist. The Bath Coup was born as a play whose purpose primarily was deception, but is proved by close study to be a sound and logical means of causing the opponents to need an additional entry, which they may be unable to find. The play consists of refusing to win the first trick when holding A J x in a suit, the King having been led by the left-hand opponent.

South, Dealer.
North and South vulnerable.



The bidding: (Figure after bid refers to numbered explanatory paragraph.)

South	West	North	East
1♣	1♠	Pass	2♠
Dbl.	Pass	3♣	3♠
3NT	Dbl.	5♣(1)	Pass
Pass	Pass

1—North's three-club response did not show his full strength, so he now gives a jump raise.

This hand was actually played in a Vanderbilt Cup tournament for teams of four. Against the final contract of five clubs West opened the heart King.

In planning his play of the hand South could see that a plenitude of discards would be available on North's diamond suit, which was easily establishable by simply conceding a trick to the Ace. But South could afford to lose only two tricks if he hoped to make his contract, and he feared that if he won the first trick with the Ace of hearts East would later continue hearts upon winning the diamond Ace, whereupon the heart Jack would be trapped and a total of three tricks lost. But by refusing to win the first heart trick South made it impossible for East and West to establish a second heart trick before their Ace of diamonds was gone and the diamond suit established for discards. True, East could be put in the lead with the diamond Ace to lead through the heart tenace and establish the setting trick, but now the entry necessary to cash this trick would be missing. By using the Bath Coup South has made an additional entry necessary to East and West and, lacking that entry, they are powerless.

In the hand above, after South ducked the first heart, West desperately tried to establish the second trick by continuing hearts, but South won with his Jack and after drawing trumps needed to concede only one more trick—the diamond Ace—so that the five-club contract was made.

BLACKIE BEAR
By D. SAM COX

Blackie Just Scatters Happiness

Somebody ought to tell Blackie how happy he has made somebody else. When he carried Hee-Haw away, he knew that Mr. Man would have to do more work, and that he couldn't ride around over the country like he had been doing, but he didn't know that he was going to start a savings bank. He didn't think a thing about making Mr. Man save up a lot of money that he could use for buying himself and Mrs. Man nice clothes and other things with.

And he had not only put new clothes on them; he seemed to have put new life in them. Mr. Man would go about his work, singing and whistling, just like he used to do when he was a young man. And it was the same way with Mrs. Man. They seemed in such good spirits all the time that their neighbors began coming to see them often. They were "good company," as people say, and they would tell about the things they saw in town, and talk about what they were going to do when they went there again.

And nobody ever had seen their house so nice and tidy. Mrs. Man had scrubbed all the floors, and put nice white sand on them, and she had fixed up her "company" room so nicely that she was so proud of it that she had to show it to her visitors. Mr. Man had put hinges on the front gate, and had fixed the steps where they had most fallen down.

And he kept plenty of wood in the kitchen for Mrs. Man to cook with, and brought water for her. It had been years and years since he had looked after things that way, and it kept Mrs. Man singing, and getting through with her work in about half the time it had been taking her to do it. And it had been many a long day since she had kept Mr. Man putting on clean shirts the way he was doing now, or putting nice clean aprons on herself.

It was just a different place, and the people were a lot different from the ones that Jay Bird saw out there plowing in the garden, a long time ago, and he said so over at Blackie's house one night. And then he went on to tell Blackie all about how Mr. Man was working and how he was fixing up his old place.

"Well, I haven't seen the place in big daylight for some little time," Blackie said, "and so I think I will have to fix a trip over there the next time you go to town. Is there any dog there now except Rover?"

"No, and Rover has got so that he spends a lot of time with Boy Dog, over at Uncle Joe's, when Mrs. Rover is visiting her folks, because he gets lonesome. He was over there today," Jay Bird said.

And that was the sort of news that always made Blackie lean back in his big chair and smoke and smoke and look mighty dreamy. You must always look out for some new plans when you see him looking dreamy.

Children Should Choose Their Own Clothes, Dressmakers and Psychologists Insist

The Choice Frequently Poor, But Mothers Must Allow It

Let Youngsters Begin Picking Out Their Apparel at the Age of Two, Says One Child Authority, and They'll Learn Rudiments of Taste Quickly.

By Elizabeth Perrow.

THE modern mother who resolves to let her young daughter learn independence and express her individuality by choosing her own clothes is often embarrassed and worried at the result. For 12-year-old daughters have been known to pick out hats with naughty little veils shading their eyes and to pine for long velvet dresses for school wear.

Yet when famous dressmakers and psychologists insist that it is just as bad to make a child wear a dress she doesn't like as to cram spinach down her throat, what can a poor parent do?

"Begin early," advises Miss Adelia Boynton, director of the National Child Research Center. "Children have very decided opinions about what they want to wear when they are only 2 years old. The mother should take the child on shopping trips and let her help choose her clothes.

"For while the 2-year-old has little idea of what is smart and becoming in dress, she learns quickly. The mother should show the child two or three suitable dresses and permit her to choose the one she likes best. Then she should show her several hats and allow her to choose from them."

Keep the Promise.

If a mother has promised a child freedom of choice in clothes she should keep her word, Miss Boynton points out. The mother who gives a child three pairs of socks to choose from, and when the child has chosen says, "No, dear, I wouldn't choose the blue ones, the white ones are much nicer," does more harm than if she had chosen the socks in the first place.

"Good taste in dress comes with experience," said Miss Boynton. "The child who begins selecting her clothes from a small group when she is 2, will be able to choose most of them when she is 12, because by then she has a criterion."

"You should never persuade a child to wear a dress she doesn't like," says Mme. Elsa Schiparelli, famous Parisian dressmaker.

"It is certainly not fair to oblige a girl to wear clothes chosen for her without consulting her own wishes in the matter. If she has no taste how much better to point out to her the reason why a certain dress is not suited to her type. There is a good practical lesson to be learned in allowing one's daughter to select her own clothes. Girls should also be taught to wear their clothes naturally, and to pay attention to detail."

Miss Molly Friedman, buyer of children's clothes at the Hecht Co., estimates that about 50 per cent of mothers permit their children freedom of choice in selecting clothes.

Popular Red.

"Children only 2 years old have decided ideas about what they want to wear," said Miss Friedman. "Of course their ideas aren't so good. Usually if left to choose for herself a small girl will invariably select a red dress. For that reason, although red is not a popular color in Washington, we keep a supply of red dresses on hand for children."

Parents, Miss Friedman says, usually permit their children to choose their own sun suits and less expensive clothes. But they insist on having the final word when expensive clothes are purchased.

"Mothers use different methods to persuade children to change their minds," she said. "Some of them try to explain to a child why one dress is more suitable than another. Sometimes they don't bother to explain. I have known a child to choose one dress and the mother to buy another one without telling the child. That is a bad way to handle the situation."

Little girls are going to be sweetly demure, and just a little bit old-fashioned in their dress this winter, as the new fall models show.

Cotton dresses are the most appropriate for small girls. And they are usually decorated with handwork. Little muslin dresses are made in peasant style, beautifully smocked, and embroidered. Plaid ginghams, such as grandmother wore when a little girl, are back, trimmed with rick-rack braid and faggoting.

The "Self-Helps."

The mother who wants to teach her child independent habits, will be interested in the "self-help" clothes, which have zipper fasteners that little hands can easily manipulate. These clothes are beautifully tailored. The fasteners are artfully concealed.

Boys will be interested in the new weather-all suits, which have high turtle-necked sweaters, and are made of gay Roman stripes, and have matching gloves. Roman stripes are going to decorate many outdoor costumes for children this winter.

Wool challis and fine wool crepe will vie for honors in the older child's wardrobe this winter, says Mrs. Elizabeth Tolson, assistant buyer of children's clothes at Lansburgh & Brothers.

These materials in beautiful plaid designs are being shown for children. One of the most popular models has a pointed collar of white wool crepe, is made with a pointed yoke, with the skirt pleated on to it.

Mrs. Tolson has a helpful suggestion for the mother who is teaching her child to choose her own clothes.

"Show the child the newest fashions in the style books," she advises. "Children are just like grown people, they want to wear what the others are wearing."

Children should be allowed to chose their own clothes, fashion experts and child psychologists agree. Two of the latest models a very young lady may choose are shown here. The two-piece coat shown on the left is of green woolen, with a matching hat. The dress, shown below, is of pink cotton, hand embroidered.

Man Who Fired Hepburn Vastly Proud of Her Huge Success.

THE man who fired Katharine Hepburn from the legitimate stage before she made her success in the movies is William P. Farnsworth, deputy administrator of the NRA in charge of amusement codes.

• • • •

This rather dubious distinction is offset by the fact that he was her discoverer, gave her a start soon after she left college. When he was director of a stock company in Baltimore, a slender redhead asked him for a job, saying she was president of the dramatic club at Bryn Mawr. He told her never to tell another producer that. As she had not yet been graduated, he suggested she return when she finished her course. In June, 1928, the redhead appeared again and he gave her a small part in "Cradle Snatchers," which called for three young girls. A Washington girl, Frances Fuller, who has made a hit in the movies this last year, also had one of these bits.

• • • •

"It is as much of a thrill to discover a great personality on the stage as it is to be discovered," said Mr. Farnsworth, who was first to detect the rare charm of Katharine Hepburn. So impressed was he with the way she handled her bit in "Cradle Snatchers" that he gave her a fatter role in the "Czarina." She was really tremendous in her small part; believing she possessed a great gift, he gambled against her lack of experience by making her the star of "The Big Pond." It was tried out in Great Neck, and after the first act Mr. Farnsworth knew the show would never go over because of Katharine's lack of background and technique. There wasn't anything to do but pull her out of it and give the part to an actress well known on Broadway.

But the man who fired Katharine Hepburn, despite the failure of "The Lake," her last stage vehicle, believes she is destined to be the world's greatest actress providing something happens to her "like a breakdown." Evidently he is a follower of the theory that a great artist must suffer before producing anything worthwhile.

• • • •

Miss Hepburn does not hold it against Mr. Farnsworth and the last time she came to Washington, she hailed him delightedly. "Pete" is the nickname he bestowed upon her, and by which she is known to stage folk. He explained how he happened to call her that.

"She never sat in a chair like an ordinary person. She always perched somewhere, on a railing, a piece of scenery or a box. One night when she was perched on the stage during a rehearsal and the spotlight was put on her, I thought of the elusive sprite, Peter Pan, and called her that. She was Pete ever after to members of the company."

• • • •

Mr. Farnsworth as the administrator of the theater code, is the official protector of the chorus girl. Heretofore chorus girls have often had to rehearse for weeks without pay, working from 15 to 20 hours a day. Often they endured this prelude without sufficient food, and after working long hours frequently would faint from exhaustion. All that has been changed under the code, for they must get 1 week's pay for every 2 weeks of rehearsal, and they can not be required to be on duty more than 10 hours a day, or engage in actual dancing more than 7 hours.

• • • •

"That means that a dance director must do his thinking before he gets to rehearsal and the result is a better planned production, and therefore a benefit all around," explained Mr. Farnsworth.

After a show opens, however, there is no limit put on the hours, for the code recognizes that extra effort put on polishing up the rough edges often means the difference between complete failure and a long run.

Small Schoolhouses May Be Abandoned

Teachers' Salaries Go to New Lows.

Topeka, Kans., Aug. 17 (U.P.).—The "little red schoolhouse" still plays an important role in Kansas life, but whether it should not be discarded in the consolidated system of rural schools is a question the State Legislature may have to decide.

A survey of rural schools and school districts, made for the Legislature by Camden Strain, research director of the Kansas Chamber of Commerce, as a CWA project, revealed interesting facts. Strain's report recommended consolidation of at least one-third, if not all, of the 2,196 "weak" school districts.

The report revealed salaries of rural school teachers have fallen to new lows. Hundreds received only $40 or $50 a month, and two districts paid $20. Several paid $25 or $30 for their teachers.

There were 99,816 pupils enrolled in one-room schools, with the average 14 to a school. Average cost per year a pupil was $71.55. More than 900 school districts last year levied no taxes for education, the slurvey said, and while 262 school districts did not open their schools last year, all except three made provision for pupils to attend schools in other districts.

Enrollment in 33 per cent of the school was ten or fewer. Six schools had one pupil each and twenty-six had only two each. Five or fewer were enrolled in 449 schools.

2-Inch Heels Make Walking Fine Beautifier

What's More, They're Now Accepted as High Fashion.

By Frances Mangum.

LOW HEELS are high in fashion's favor. They are also highly esteemed by women who take pride in beautiful feet, and who realize the charm of a graceful walk.

There is nothing that will so distort the feet and give rise to blisters and bunions as badly fitted shoes. Women with long feet who attempt to squeeze them into stubby rouind-toed shoes will vouch for it. And so will those who start out on a walking spree with heels too high.

Two-Inch Heels.

Walking is a beautifier if it is taken regularly and in the proper kind of shoes. Heels should never be more than 2 inches high and are usually more comfortable if they're slightly lower. They should be ample wide for the foot to spread so that all the muscles may exercise freely. At the same time they should be sufficiently narrow to give the foot support, particularly through the arch.

Those who dread shopping because after a trek through the stores their feet "ache terribly" can usually trace the source of their difficulty to badly fitted shoes or shoes inappropriate for the occasion.

Just as tennis requires a certain type shoe, and golf another, so does shopping have shoe demands. Heels must be low, and the last well adapted to the foot, or burning feet will warn the walker that callouses and blisters lie in her near future.

Low Heels for the Tall.

For evening spike heels are smart, but so are radically low ones—for tall girls. There was a time when a tall woman's height was an embarrassment to her at a party, as she grew an extra three inches upon donning her evening slippers. Many an escort has called for his date to find her towering above him. Fortunately for these tall ones slippers are now available with very low heels.

There are three simple things a woman can do to insure the beauty and health of her feet. First, exercise her feet; second, painstaking choice of shoes that fit, and third, powder her feet well before putting on her shoes.

Sports Thrive On Continent

Despite European Unrest, German Chaos, Women Still Compete.

By Ware Torrey and Janet Owen.

WHILE guns sound over the border in Austria, and German men watch the current of militarism boiling toward the surface, even the glory of marching under Nazi banners can not turn the women of Germany from their new-found interest in sports.

From a nation of housewives, German wives and daughters in a dozen years have placed their country among the leading nations of the world in women's sports. Germany and England will bring the strongest challenge to America in most of the events of the next Olympic games. In track and field events alone, more girls are trying out than in any other country.

In a recent dual meet with Poland, rival to England and Austria for second place behind Germany in European track and field, the German girls' team won by 64 to 35. Stella Walsh and Babe Didrickson are the only two women in the world who have bettered some of the German girls' records.

In all the United States there are only about 800 girls who go in seriously for track and field. This number is equaled by the Charlottenburg Club of Berlin, alone. The number of sports clubs in Germany as a whole may be estimated from the fact that there are hundreds, literally, in Berlin.

The women's world games to be held in London, August 9-11, should show how strongly the German girls are moving toward the 1936 Olympic contests in Berlin.

Among the names of German women who have gone on the honor roll of sports in the last few years is Ingeborg Braumuller, of Berlin, German high jump champion of 1929, who won the high jump in the World's Women's Games at Prague. Marie Dollinger, of Nuremburg, set a new German record for the 100-meter sprint on July 15, with a time of 11.9 seconds. She was a finalist in the last Olympics. Kaethe Krauss, of Dresden set another German record on July 8 for the 200-meter sprint, covering the distance in 24.6 seconds, just four-tenths seconds slower than the world record. The world record in the shotput has just been cracked by Giesela Mauermeyer, of Munich, who raised the standard to 47 feet 2½ inches.

Though Germany has greatest power among her sportswomen in track and field, she has also produced Cilly Aussem, winner of both the French and English tennis championships in 1931, and Helene Meyer, world's fencing champion.

Hitler's urgence toward a domestic life for women has not affected Germen women's sports, as might have been expected.

"The only effect of the present regime on women's sports is the elimination of the 800-meter run from the track and field program, as too strenuous," says Harry Hirsch, recently arrived in the United States from Germany. Mr. Hirsch is assistant to Dr. Walter Bergmann, the vice president of International Women's Sports Federation.

Harsh Voices Are Outlawed In California

Careless Diction Will Go if Present Plans Are Accomplished.

THE Golden State is going in for golden tones.

For the first time in its history California is becoming speech conscious. Strident voices, careless diction and jangling vocal rhythms will soon be a thing of the past in that State if plans now under way work out successfully.

So believes Mrs. Gertrude Enfield, faculty member of the University of Southern California, who recently visited in Washington on her way home from England, where she attended the Oxford Poetry Festival.

A pioneer teacher of verse speaking choir work, Mrs. Enfield has been carrying out an unusual program centered around the art of speaking in unison.

Interpretation an Object.

"The objectives are the improvement of diction, the modulation of tone and the perfecting of ability to interpret the moods and the messages of leading literary figures—particularly poets," she explained. "Marjorie Gullan, whose methods I recently observed, is carrying out much the same type of work in England."

Mrs. Enfield began her project in California in 1926. An article in a teacher's journal telling of such work in England gave her the idea. She immediately started formulating a program for verse speaking groups composed of children of the Fairburn School in Los Angeles, of which she is principal.

Her project received such favorable attention that a course in choral verse speaking was made a part of the curriculum at the University of Southern California. Mrs. Enfield teaches this course in addition to her work at the Fairburn School.

In Other Countries.

Similar classes in verse choral work have recently been introduced at the university at Berkeley and at the San Jose Teachers' College. There is, also, a verse speaking choir in Detroit and a number in New York, England, Austria and Switzerland.

In her own work Mrs. Enfield works out the tone patterns of the poem and the rhythm and melody before she plans the solos, duets and choruses.

"For instance, in presenting 'The King's Breakfast,' by A. A. Milne, the chorus gives the narrative," she said. "Then different children take the part of the king, the queen, the footman and the cow. Each of the 'solo' children are dressed appropriately for their parts, while the choir group wears robes."

Other poems that she has worked out successfully are "Stars" by Vera Teasdale, "Forboding" by Don Blanding, "Wind in the Pine" by Lew Sarrett, and cuttings from "Santa Fe" by Vachel Lindsay, "The Barrel Organ" by Alfred Noyes, and the Psalms.

Children Hard to Train.

Mrs. Enfield pointed out that the speaking voice, if properly trained, is far more beautiful than the singing voice. "But training children's speech for group work entails some outstanding difficulties," she said. "For instance, children from 8 to 16 are likely to produce flat harsh tones which spoil the entire effect of choral work. They must be taught to keep their throats open and their tones modulated. They must be taught, too, to pronounce all words correctly and to enunciate carefully."

Her work, however, is not limited to children, for while she does direct groups of children, she also trains teachers in the art of directing verse speaking choirs.

Her success in the latter field has created such interest throughout California that Vierling Kersey, State Superintendent of California Schools, recently called a committee to formulate a speech program for the State curriculum.

No More Textbooks Is Speaker's Prophesy

There will be no textbooks in the schools of the future, predicted Col. F. L. Devereux, vice chairman of the National Citizen's Advisory Committee, in a recent address to members of the National Association of Public School Officials, at Columbia University and the School of Education, New York University.

When textbooks disappear, Col. Devereux says, students will be taught by radio and talking pictures. Equal educational opportunities will require provision for large school centers where audio-vision methods of instruction will make classes of 1,000 practical.

Young American Women Bid Farewell to Futility In Outlook of the Decade

By Malvina Lindsay,
Woman's Page Editor.

AFTER an armistice of 15 years, the souls of Susan B. Anthony, Frances E. Willard, Jane Cunningham Croly and other femiline leaders who would not accept things as they were, seem to be marching on.

• • • •

A 23-year-old girl, Viola Ilma, is heading the National youth conference now meeting in New York to consider ways and means of setting the world right. A 25-year-old girl, Henrietta Buckmaster, has recently published a widely discussed novel in which she hails the end of "chemical writing" and youthful defeatism. These are only two of the many manifestations of a new feminine outlook on life that is characteristic of the '30s.

• • • •

Only a decade ago most young women, jazz-mad and self-satisfied, would have scorned as Babbitty anything like a conference or a movement and would have branded as sentimental any book that expressed conviction or hope.

Only a few years ago, embittered and cynical by economic depression, they would have been equally unresponsive to any call to battle or to faith.

NOW, however, dispassion and detachment are not so much in style. In the fact of economic and social crisis, youth is no longer ashamed to pound tables and shout, "Something must be done!" Of particular significance is the newly awakened interest of young women in a better world. For, as any politician knows, women once roused are a fury that knows no bounds and are as relentless on achieving their ends as the Northwest Mounted Police.

• • • •

There is no better example of this than the outburst of feminine activity that followed the chaotic days of the Reconstruction. Because of it, women have the vote today. Because of it, the country has known prohibition and repeal. Because of it, a woman's club has been organized at every crossroads. Because of it, ladies' aid and foreign missionary societies have exerted their far-reaching influence. Largely because of it, the jazz revolt developed in the '20s and swept Mrs. Grundy from her throne.

• • • •

Those who love passive living may shudder at the thought of new women reformers in the offing. For it is true that many women's movements had their quota of bigotry, prejudice and fanaticism. But always these weaknesses were overshadowed by the greatness of the goal sought—a better world.

MOREOVER, these movements always were surging with vitality. The woman reformer, objectionable though she may have been at times, at least was not a defeatist. She had a gusto and a courage that made those who laughed at her seem a little anemic and inept.

• • • •

If women set out again to make the world what it should be, they will be seeking to change its economic rather than its moral face. In fact, economic security has already been chosen as the goal to which one large organization, the Federation of Business and Professional Clubs, has dedicated its ten-year program.

• • • •

This is a goal that calls for steady offensive rather than hysterical attack. It is a Utopian goal that may never be realized. But the fact that women are turning their faces toward it, at least means they are saying farewell to futility.

Curricula Are Called Lacking In Essentials

Cultural and Vocational Don't Teach of People, Is Charge.

THE traditional educational curriculum, organized along cultural and vocational lines, is lacking in the things that make for success, believes Prof. Norman L. Hoopingarner of New York University.

The professional man suffers especially from this lack in the curricula, the professor has observed.

"In almost every case the professional man's training has failed to teach him how to deal effectively with people," declared Prof. Hoopingarner recently. "Educational curricula should be reorganized from the point of view of personality development rather than for the imparting of information. Education should be a process designed to equip individuals for functioning effectively in life," he said.

Vocational guidance is as far from the right track as are educational curricula, according to the educator.

"Most vocational guidance is itself misguided," he said.

Too many individuals are directed into specific types of work, even into specific jobs, he believes.

"And those who do the directing seldom give thought to the needs for adjustment," the professor said. "Occupations are changing with economic and social conditions and it is as important to train students for adjustments as for specific lines of work."

8,000 Minute Bottles Make One Collection

Furniture Maker's Hobby Brings Sightseers Into His Home.

OLD LYME, Conn., Aug. 17.—Stanley Davis, maker of furniture, has a hobby which has led to his collecting 8,000 bottles, none of them over 4 ounces in size, one of the largest and most valuable assortments in the country.

No two of Davis' collection are alike, and their shapes range from Easter eggs to pistols and from cherries to umbrellas.

Among them is one known as "The Charlie Ross Bottle," a relic of the famous kidnaping case which stirred the country in 1874.

This bottle, probably put out by some medicine company, bears the likeness of the 4-year-old boy, who disappeared from his Germantown, Pa., home, never to be found.

Hundreds Visit.

The collection, displayed in glass cases in a room at the rear of Davis' gift and furniture shop, has attracted hundreds of visitors. More than 100 persons have browsed through the exhibit this year.

It required seven years for Davis to amass his glassware display, and several of the pieces are reputedly worth hundreds of dollars.

Many of the bottles have been gifts from friends interested in seeing the Davis collection grow. Others are heirlooms and have value as antiques.

In the early part of the century, ladies carried long thin vials, known as "Attar of Roses" bottles, in their handbags. Davis has more than 100 of these in varied colors. They are blue, pale green with black and white stripes, amber and dark red trimmed with gold. Some few are of cut glass.

Half-Inch One

The smallest bottle of the 8,000 measures half an inch in height and holds but a few drops. Another is shaped like a cluster of grapes. Davis has refused $40 for it.

One of the bottles bears the inscription, "International Pure Sour Milk." Another is of black glass, and some few resemble those used by liquor salesmen before prohibition.

Still another has two necks, and Davis says this was used for two kinds of liquor. One is shaped like a pair of bellows.

A number of the bottles are so commonplace that one recalls having seen similar ones on the bathroom shelf at home, and in the next are "bottles" made of wood.

Davis is loath to relate the histories of his famous collection, saying that collectors' tales are so often "made up."

Collecting bottles is merely one of several hobbies he pursues for entertainment. Another is farming. And he raises prize bantams, geese, ducks and pheasants.

"Gathering bottles," he says, "is much less expensive, though."

Home Work Counsel Combats NRA Ruling Against Mothers

NEW YORK, Aug. 17 (Spl.).—Mothers may not do outside work at home unless they pay some one to care for their children. This is the decree of the NRA which forbids such homework, contending it should be done in factories. But the law is contested by Julius Hochfelder, counsel of the Home Work Protective League of the United States.

"There is nothing in the law forbidding commissioners to license mothers to work at home," he says. Mr. Hochfelder wants permits for Mrs. Nettie Sabatini and Mrs. Rose Perricone to work at home.

Mrs. Sabatini, who is 24 and has been married eight years, says she can do the work at home and still care for her daughter, Annette.

The mother says she cannot engage a nurse for the baby, as she would have to pay more than she earned. She insists that her work takes only five hours a day, six days a week, and brings in about $15 a week. Her husband, who has been out of work for nearly two years, recently obtained a job with the Department of Public Welfare, working six days a week on alternate weeks, and getting $12 a week.

"We have denied ourselves the barest necessities," the husband said. "The baby's milk costs $3 a week. We are not trying to make millions, we are only trying to keep alive."

Tempting Odor Of Delectables Floats Abroad

Fruit Sponge Cakes Are a Specialty at One Pastry Shop.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

IF EVER there was a harvest time for cakes, it's now. And if ever there was a day when such a variety of cakes were selling at special prices, it's today.

There's a pastry shop on Seventeenth street that has caused more than one shopper to pause outside the large show window to gaze at the delectable morsels within. Gazing usually leads to walking in, and once in it's impossible to resist the smell of fresh cooked pastries. One inevitably comes out loaded with boxes of cookies and cakes.

Today the chef has been particularly busy making fruit sponge cakes. These are 8 inches in diameter and crowned with golden crushed pineapple, peaches and cherries. Just imagine topping off your lunch with a generous slice. If you care to serve it for dessert you'll need nothing else. These cakes are 30 cents apiece!

There are some people who are wondering what kinds of cakes to serve their guests tonight. Some of them wouldn't like cocoanut. Others turn up their noses at chocolate. So what? This pastry shop offers a splendid suggestion. They put up a variety box which includes 45 or 50 cakes, all sizes, shapes and flavors. There are some, half cake and half macaroon, some with vanilla icing. In fact there is every kind of cake you can think of. This delicious parcel costs but 80 cents.

Apple Kuchens.

A downtown shop has a specialty today that will turn Sunday morning breakfast into a feast. It's a German fresh apple kuchen!

One of these ample cakes costs 29 cents and serves six people.

Sunday morning breakfast should be a time when bacon and eggs are taboo. It should be a time when especially tempting viands grace the table, for in many families this meal takes the place of luncheon. A touch of originality here can make it a meal to be remembered. The apple kuchens will do their share.

White Fudge Cake.

Another proof that today is cake day is a white fudge cake for 57 cents. What a cake! It's made from a prize winning recipe. And has it appeal—for the eye and the appetite.

Goodness knows how many inches around it is, but it's two layers high. The top is piled up like a snowy mountain top, with fluffy white fudge. In between the layers is another thickness of the same white fudge.

Special Preserves.

Keep this in mind for Monday. The food shop of a downtown store has some grape, raspberry and strawberry preserves selling at a mysteriously low price.

Figure it out if you can: The wholesale price is 39 cents now and usually it's more. But the preserves may be bought in this food department for 29 cents a jar! The quality is superior.

Those who have tasted the good preserves Aunt-so-and-so in the country makes know the difference between store preserves and home-made ones. "Sure, we can tell the difference any time!" they say. But they're wrong in this instance. These were carefully made with nothing artificial added. The strawberries, as you can see through the glass, are absolutely whole and unusually tender. There seem to be none of those bothersome little hard seeds.

The grape preserves are favorites with those who like their sweetness tart. The raspberry preserves are very sweet but with an unforgettable flavor.

These 29-cent jars hold 2 pounds and 13 ounces.

Two Good Drinkables.

This is for Monday, too. The food department of another store is selling 1-quart bottles of tomato juice for 21 cents.

The tomato juice, a favorite early morning beverage, and a real refreshener whenever it's taken, is put out by a concern which concerns itself over the quality of its goods. So in this buy, you are not only getting quantity but you are getting a first-class product for considerably less than usual.

The same department sells a specially prepared ginger ale for 10 cents a bottle. This ginger ale is made for this store and is not available at any other. For this reason and because it is quite a drawing card they sell it at a come-on price. There are two kinds, a pale and a golden, both in 16-ounce bottles.

Why not try it? Ginger ale is a fine thing to keep in the icebox. Those who like a highball in the late afternoon, or those who like a cold drink at noon or during the afternoon will be sure to appreciate this ginger ale.

Olives, Too!

Next week will be a fine time to buy olives. There are some medium-sized olives, they have the richest flavor, on sale for 43 cents a quart.

They're a good thing to keep on hand, too. They add a touch to dinner and grace a sandwich plate, or a salad course.

Child Chats

By Alice Fox Pitts.

I HAVE never missed a picnic for lack of some one to stay home with the baby. A clothes basket made a handy container, with convenient handles for lugging it up the brook to a suitable picnic place. Covered with mosquito netting, he slept peacefully while we cooked the steak over a camp fire.

No less an authority than Children's Bureau of the U. S. Department of Labor puts its stamp of approval on this method of carrying the baby on summer jaunts.

"A market besket is much more comfortable for the baby than his mother's arms," a leaflet issued by the bureau says, "and is more convenient for the mother. It should be arranged like a bed, with a thin mattress, rubber sheeting and blanket. A cotton mosquito netting should be carried along to cover the basket. A young baby can stay in the basket through an automobile journey, except when it is time for feeding, changing the clothing, exercise or other care."

Princeton Plans No-Course Study

Honor Students to Direct Own Education.

PRINCETON, N. J., Aug. 17.—A no-course plan of study, which will enable students to develop their interests as they see fit, is to be tried out here. Forty-seven undergraduates, all honor students, have been selected for the experiment.

The new plan, according to the board of trustees, is designed to benefit men "who have demonstrated unusual ability in their departmental work."

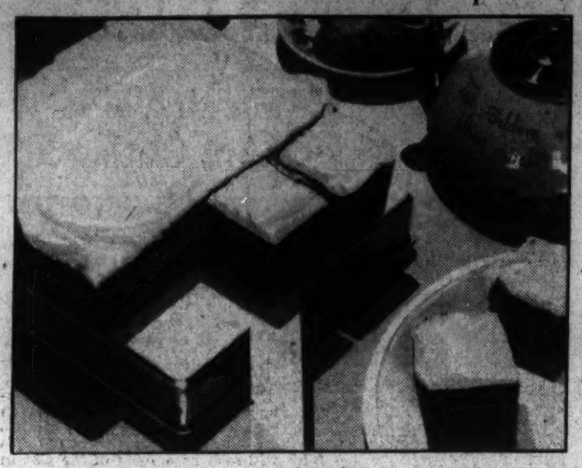
"They are to be advised, but not commanded," the announcement states. "The responsibility of an education is left almost entirely on their own shoulders, and the only test of their work will come in the thesis and in final comprehensive examinations."

Red Raspberry Jam.

4 cups (2 lbs.) prepared fruit
6½ cups (2¾ lbs.) sugar
½ bottle fruit pectin

To prepare fruit, crush or grind about 2 quarts fully ripe berries. Measure sugar and prepared fruit into large kettle, mix well, and bring to a full rolling boil over hottest fire. Stir constantly before and while boiling. Boil hard 1 minute. Remove from fire and stir in fruit pectin. Then stir and skim by turns for just five minutes to cool slightly, to prevent floating fruit. Pour quickly. Paraffin hot jam at once. Makes about 10 glasses (6 fluid ounces each).

Summer Cakes Should Be Rapid



Overheated Housewives Want Time Out From Their Stuffy Kitchens; They Can Get It if They Make Cakes This Way.

By Ann Barrett.

IT'S NOT THE BEAT, it's the rapidity that gets general approval in summer cake-making. Women who want their share of fun—outside the kitchen—are glad to forget the creaming and beating and egg-separating and what-not, in favor of cakes that can be whisked together quickly.

The trick in making such quick cakes is to have a recipe that calls for enough egg and shortening in proportion to flour to give the cake a soft, flaky crumb, even if the texture isn't so fine-grained as in a fussier cake. Using sour milk and soda in place of sweet milk and baking powder helps to make such a cake light and soft, too. Baking it in a square tin is a bit easier than baking and icing layers.

Summer Quick Cake.

First put the following ingredients into a good-sized bowl: One cut granulated sugar, 6 tablespoons softened (not melted) butter, 2 whole eggs, 2-3 cup sour milk, ½ teaspoon vanilla. With a slotted spoon, mix and beat these ingredients till they are thoroughly combined. Then measure 2 cups sifted pastry flour into another bowl. Add ⅜ teaspoon soda and ¼ teaspoon salt, and sift the whole mixture again. Then combine this with first mixture, and beat about 2 minutes with a slotted spoon.

Turn batter into a buttered square tin, and bake at 350 F. Or if you do prefer layers, in layer cake tins at about 370 F. Or even in cup cakes, at 385 F.

You can easily make this into a chocolate cake. Just add 2 squares (ounces) unsweetened chocolate, first melted over hot water, then cooled a little, to the sugar and butter mixture. Probably you'd better increase the sugar to 1¼ cups, all told.

Just to change an old saying about a bit, spicing adds variety to life. For example, leave out the vanilla in the first recipe and add 1 teaspoon ginger to the flour mixture. Or, add 1 teaspoon cinnamon —which will be Spanish cake. Or, add the old standby spice combination, ½ teaspoon cinnamon and ¼ teaspoon each nutmeg and clove.

Both the chocolate and spice batters will make a fine impression baked in cup cakes and then dressed up a bit, if the occasion warrants it. Slice off the tops, scoop out the centers a little, and then fill with whipped cream, sweetened, flavored and nutted a little.

Good Plain or Iced.

Many women like to leave their cake uniced now and then during the summer. Because then they may be served with ice cream or sweetened, fresh fruit, without danger of a sweet surfeit. The cooked egg-white kind of frosting that I've recommended so many times makes an icing that is not over-rich or sweet, however. Seven-eighths cup granulated sugar, 1 egg white and 3 tablespoons water, beaten with rotary beater over boiling water till it peaks.

The thinner and sweeter confectioner's sugar icing has the advantage of needing no cooking. This is especially nice made with any kind of fresh fruit juice, like this. Put 2 tablespoons fresh fruit juice in a bowl. Slowly beat in enough sifted confectioner's sugar (1 cup or more) to make this thick enough to spread. Toward the last beat 1 tablespoon melted butter to keep icing soft.

POTOMAC PARK

By CAROLYN COX

When Wanda Mallory meets David Randall, she falls in love with him, and he apparently returns her affection, but there is an air of mystery about him. At a tea party he meets Peter Carlin, a guest, who stuns the gathering by a reference to David's wife, and adds that his son is dead. David is evidently perturbed and rushes from the apartment. Wanda follows.

WANDA was admitted to Randall's house by a maid who was more than slightly deaf and whose English was so broken as to be almost worthless as a medium of conversation. She did learn that Mr. Randall was not in, and when the woman stepped out of the doorway and pointed to a dark room, Wanda guessed that she was being invited into the parlor to wait for him if she pleased.

She accepted the invitation. The woman lighted a floor lamp and hobbled away toward the rear of the house, the sound of her footsteps growing fainter and fainter until they died. And the house was as still as a tomb.

Wanda waited.

The room was clean, but ugly and cheerless. The furnishings were heavy, gloomy, well preserved—which was almost a pity—and old. A huge German Bible lay on a small spider-legged table, which looked as though its legs had bent under the load. There were no other books in the room, nor magazines, nor signs that the members of the household were concerned with literature or any of the other arts—except crocheting. Handmade doilies of coarse cotton thread were on the arms and the backs of the chairs, on the tables, and on the mantel over a fireless hearth. Black and white pictures in thick black frames were plentiful—steel engravings of scenes which Wanda did not grieve for not having seen, all with wide mats discolored by age. The bric-a-brac was as plentiful as the doilies—in fact, it was matched piece by piece on the mantel and tables, and triangular bits hung on the walls.

Where Was David?

The parlor—the best room in the house! What must David's room be like.

She wondered why he did not come.

She had not been surprised to find that she, in a taxicab, had arrived before he could come, walking. But one of the ugly hands of the gilt-smeared clock had pushed its way around the complete circle of the yellow face, and yet he had not come.

It was still raining outside. The street lights shone through the rosettes of the cotton lace curtains.

She wondered about that woman whom Carlin had spoken of as "Your wife." She was not jealous or resentful, nor conscious of any deception. For them the other woman had not existed. Step by step she reviewed their acquaintance, their deepening friendship, and found no spot where the shadow of another woman had stood between them, nor any veiled reference to her in his speech.

And the son—what of him?

She could not be sure. There had been few occasions when they, together, had observed or talked to or with other children. Passing boys on bicycles or scooters or skates in the park, or selling papers, he had sometimes turned with a smile to watch them, but so had she. He was kind to children, but so was she. He would step into the street to keep from walking over a hopscotch game, but so would she, who had no children, and whose consideration of their rights was based upon early memories of the importance of hopscotch to a child in the thick of the game.

Memory Recalled.

Only one recollection carried much significance, and that was when he had said at Arlington: "These are the dead. For some of them eternal sleep. For some very few of them a resurrection. For some of them—immortality!"

Abraham, listening to the promise of the Lord Jehovah that his seed should be as the sands of the sea. It was an old, old conception of immortality, based on human, instinctive longing for survival, a longing as natural as the dread of annihilation and a part of it. Life. Themselves marching on through the ages, life touching life, sometimes briefly, but flame-kindling new life as the old torch flickered out. These have sons and daughters on the earth, and these are immortal.

Yes. Faith in his own immortality had set the clarion ring in his voice that day. He was boasting. "Je suis le chose que dure."

"These are the dead; you may declare one day over my sod. These are the dead, but not all. David Randall is immortal."

And even then, ironically, his son, who was his vain boast of immortality, had returned to dust.

A Cruel Woman.

The cruelty of the woman who had kept the news from him seemed not more strange than that he should have completely shut himself off from the one soul that bound him to life.

Wanda heard his step at last, the rasp of his key in the lock, and the creak of the door.

He saw her in the parlor as he was passing by, and he came in and stood by her chair, looking down upon her, and she could not tell whether or not he was glad that she was there.

"It was good of you to come," he said politely. "I'm sorry I was so long."

"No matter. I've only just come."

"Won't you—I think you'd be more comfortable in my room—if you don't mind. There's nobody home but the maid."

"Of course. Why not?"

They went up the creaky stairs. The house was clean but old, and old houses have a strong olfactory appeal. Odors of roast beef and liver and cabbage and onions, palatable once but long since vanished, clung in stubborn tenacity to the stairs.

Pointless Conversation.

His room was over the parlor. It was gloomy, too, but there were books and newspapers and manuscripts scattered around, lately used, but others had been put in order by hands unaccustomed to books, and were upside down on the shelves or even back to wall.

A large, upholstered reclining chair, shabby but comfortable, sat under a wall light, and a heavy wooden bedstead stood under its white puffy mound in the corner. The lace curtains were cut from the same bolt as the ones in the parlor below. The crocheted doilies were there, askew on the tables he used, tolerated from indifference.

He took her coat and hat and hung them with his in the closet. Wearily, he placed her in the one comfortable chair, and adjusted the back and foot rest. Kindly. And then he sat down in a hard straight chair nearby, facing her. Courteously. It was impossible to know whether or not she had been right in coming.

"It's a disagreeable rain," he said in a flat voice.

"Yes."

"The street is very icy in places."

"Yes."

"February has been surprisingly cold after an astonishingly mild winter."

"Yes," she said again, unable to say more, thinking how strange it was that he should speak of these things when they had watched the weather's changes together nearly every day in February.

Nothing to Say.

"The cherry blossoms will probably be late this season."

"You're fond of them?" she asked, as though she had not heard him say so many times.

"Aren't we all?"

"I used to love them. They have grown so much—the trees, I mean—since I last saw them in bloom. I'm eager to see them again."

"It may be my fancy, but it seems to me they get paler every year. They're not so pink as they used to be."

"That's funny."

"Funny?"

"Queer."

"Everything is . . . Why did you come over, Wanda?"

Emotion—she could not tell what kind—made his voice quiver.

"You're not—was I wrong—I'm sorry. I'll go now."

"Please." He put out his hand to prevent her rising. "The light shines in your eyes."

He crossed the room and pulled the chain of a small goose-neck reading lamp, and turned the shade so that there was only a pool of light on the floor after the bothersome one had been extinguished. The shadows were restful—and weird.

He stood before her. "You don't despise me then?"

Her eyes widened. "Despise you? Why?"

"For deceiving you. For not telling you about her. Was that why you came—to ask me if—if I——"

She could not complete the meaning of his unfinished sentence.

"I don't know what you are trying to say, David. I don't care anything about her. I don't even know why I came except—except that I wanted to be with you."

"Why?"

"I don't know, David. When I told you about my mother that day, it was comforting. And I thought you might feel the same way about me—I hoped you would."

"You're not angry with me for not telling you?"

"No. Of course not. I wasn't thinking about that when I came."

"What were you thinking about, Wanda?"

"I told you," she repeated patiently. "I thought we might talk or even just sit here without talking, you know."

Watermelon Freeze Awarded First in Post Recipe Contest

Miss Josie Trailey Is the Winner; Watermelon Marmalade and New England Spiced Rind Are the Next in Line for Awards.

By Susan Mills.

THERE are ways and ways with melons and Washington housewives seem to know them all. The melon recipes were many and good. It is unfortunate space doesn't permit the printing of all of them.

First prize of $3 is awarded Miss Josie Frailey, 5716 Eighth street northwest. To Mrs. Anna La Buda, 802 Philadelphia avenue, Silver Spring, Md., second prize of $2 is given. Miss M. Fowler, care of A. V. Burgess, Old Harbor Inn, North Chatham, Mass., receives third prize of $1. Honorable mentions are awarded Mrs. B. D. Adlesberger, Mrs. Eugene Smith, Miss E. M. Tucker and Mrs. D. B. Zimmer.

Prize-winning recipes appear in order.

Watermelon Freeze.

Cut watermelon rind and scoop the fruit into small balls. Do the same with cantaloupe. Alternate fruit balls, chop mint and sprinkle over fruit; cover with a pint of sherry wine, place in freezing tray for three hours.

Watermelon Marmalade.

6 cups sugar
2 oranges

Remove green and pink portions from rind. Grind, drain off the liquid; measure, add sugar and allow to stand 30 minutes. Slice entire oranges as thinly as possible, add to rind and sugar, and cook until thick and clear about 45 minutes. Pour into sterilized jars and seal.

New England Spiced Melon Rind.

Pare away green rind from watermelon and honeydew rind, cut in small fancy shapes, triangles, circles and cubes, and soak overnight in water to which a lump of alum has been added. This will make it crisp. Wash off in clear water; weigh, using 3½ pounds rind to 2½ pounds brown sugar, 1 pint vinegar, stick of cinnamon, a little mace and cloves tied in small bag. Make syrup of sugar, vinegar and spices, cook rind in it until easily pierced with a fork. Pack in jars. Needs no sealing.

Thanks for the Household Hints. Some of them will appear next Tuesday. Those of you who have helpful ideas that are labor saving or useful, please send them to Susan Mills, The Washington Post. No prizes are offered, but since Washington housewives are always ready to help each other out, the "hint" column will be the result of their cooperative spirit.

The Popular Chicken Enters the Contest

Chicken is always good, summer, winter and in-between seasons. All of you have original and good ideas about the preparation of this popular bird. For next week's contest send in your chicken recipes to Susan Mills, The Washington Post. All contributions should have full name and address printed on each sheet. They should be received by Thursday of next week.

Prizes will be the same. Also, don't forget about the Household Hints.

How to Keep Well

By Irving S. Cutter.

Vincent's Angina, or Trench Mouth.

Ulcerations within the mouth and upper pharynx are usually referred to as stomatitis or mouth canker. Although we pay considerable attention to the general hygiene of the body, most of us fail to recognize the importance of mouth hygiene. Any infection within the mouth or on the mucous membrane of the pharynx may have an important effect upon general health.

A special type of infection of the mucous membrane of the mouth, characterized by the formation of ulcers, is called Vincent's angina or trench mouth. This condition has a tendency to occur in persons between the ages of 20 and 40 who are below par, overworked or fatigued from any cause. It may sometimes be associated with the breaking through of a wisdom tooth or a throat infection.

The attack usually begins with a slight difficulty in swallowing, some hoarseness, a feeling of fatigue and possibly some fever. The tongue is usually quite heavily coated. If prompt treatment is not instituted, within two or three days the mucous membrane of the throat will be swollen and red, and here and there patches of ulceration covered with a grayishlike coating somewhat resembling the coating of the tongue will occur. Sometimes this ulceration is quite deep and considerable tissue is destroyed. This is due to the shutting off of circulation and is coincident with the destruction of the capillaries supplying the mucous membrane of the mouth and throat.

Once the ulcerative character has been recognized, every effort should be made to prevent its spread. Careful isolation of the patient must be secured, and he should use no eating utensils common to the remainder of the family.

In the first instance treatment must be directed to cleansing without injury the mouth, guns, and tonsils. This may be best accomplished by using a copious throat irrigation with hydrogen peroxide solution, later applying cotton swabs soaked in peroxide to the affected area. The use of sodium perborate is by many considered more effective than the hydrogen peroxide, or, if one prefers, a solution of 1 to 4,000 of potassium permanganate. If the infection does not yield within a day or two, professional help must be secured and strong antiseptics, such as mercury solutions, preparations of arsenic and copper, &c., may be used by the physician.

It has been shown that the fusiform bacilli described by Vincent are found in practically every normal mouth, and it seems reasonable to assume that they are not the cause of original inflammation and ulceration. They no doubt greatly aggravate the condition, feeding upon the destroyed and decaying tissue. Unfortunately the infection is sometimes accompanied by bronchial inflammation and, in certain instances, by the formation of lung abscesses. Occasionally the tonsils are the chief sites of the ulcerations, which may be large and deep, due to invasion of the tonsil crypts. Removal of the tonsils during this ulcerative stage should never be attempted.

The infection is frequently overlooked by both the dentist and the physician. In any event careful attention to mouth hygiene should be the rule. Mouth washes may be helpful but in severe cases are not effective. As a routine in mouth hygiene they are useful. In the presence of any throat irritation hydrogen peroxide and sodium perborate can do no harm and may do good. A useful mouth wash consists of 1 part hydrogen peroxide and 4 parts of a 5 per cent solution of boric acid.

What Today Means

"Leo."

If August 18 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 10:45 a. m. to 12:45 p. m., from 3:45 to 5:45 p. m. and from 7:45 to 9:45 p. m. The danger periods are from 6:45 to 8:45 a. m., from 1:45 to 3:45 p. m. and from 10:[illegible] p. m. until midnight.

Simply because August 18 is Saturday and a holiday spirit is rife, is no justification for tasks to be neglected, and complications may follow if they are. A happy-go-lucky type of individual may try to persuade you to go on a wild goose chase, so it might be advisable in accepting any invitation to ascertain if plans of a definite nature have been already made and exact destination decided upon. Water sports and travel thereon both require that caution be exercised, for any form of reckless undertaking or horseplay may cause regret. A lack of punctuality in keeping an appointment might cause a quarrel, so be careful this does not occur. Conventionality requires careful attention be given to attire, and carelessness in this might lead to an embarrassing rebuke by some one whose good opinion is valued.

If a woman and August 18 is your natal day, unless you differ greatly from most every one else born on this date, you are inclined to be overcautious. If you are wise you will not let fear of this, that, or the other thing hamper your judgment, when instinctively you feel a certain course of action is correct. Educational work should prove a lucrative field for you.

The child born on August 18 may, as it grows up, be rather precocious. Be watchful this child does not become satisfied with only a smattering of knowledge on many topics and a thorough familiarity with but few.

If a man and Augsut 18 is your birthday, you are probably possessed of a far more studious nature than your friends give you credit for having, as you are not inclined to boast. Having a great deal of determination, you will never be satisfied until you reach the goal you are striving for. Perseverance will make this possible. A home and wife is essential for your complete contentment.

Burke Gives 3 Blows in Finale as Nats Nose Out Tribe Twice, 4-3, 1-0

Rowe Beats Yanks, 2-0, for 14th in Row After Tigers Drop First, 5-0

46,571 See Hurler Near Record

Young Star, Hurt in Fall, Recovers and Gives Only Three Hits.

New York, Outhit 8 to 6 in Opener, Rings Up 20th for Gomez.

YANKEE STADIUM, New York, Aug. 17 (AP). — Lynwood (Schoolboy) Rowe, Detroit's lanky 22-year-old pitching sensation from El Dorado, Ark., stood the New York Yankees on their collective heads today for the second time in three days and swept to his fourteenth consecutive victory of the American League campaign on the crest of a dazzling shutout performance.

Despite a heavy fall in the second inning, when he tripped over third base and nearly broke his ankle, Rowe recovered from a streak of subsequent wildness to check the Yankees with three solitary singles, strike out no less than 11 batsmen and add a 2-to-0 triumph to his remarkable winning streak.

New League Record.

The giant "boy wonder," who is now within two games of equaling the record American League streak of 16 jointly held by Joe Wood, Walter Johnson and Bob Grove, pitched the Tigers to an even break in the concluding double-header of the crucial series and thrilled a crowd of 46,571 spectators.

Vernon (Lefty) Gomez, obtaining revenge for his shellacking in the first game of the series, blanked the Tigers by 5 to 0 in today's opener, thanks to a heavy early attack on Vic Sorrell, but the Tigers left the Yankee Stadium with three out of five games in their bag and a commanding margin of five and a half games over New York in the pennant race.

Is Easily the Hero.

Brilliant pitching thus marked both ends of the double bill, but Rowe was easily the hero as he handed the Yankees their second coat of whitewash for 1934 and the third they have experienced within two seasons. Bob Grove turned the trick last year, after New York had gone through two years without a shutout, and Earl Whitehill, of Washington, blanked them with one hit earlier this season.

The big schoolboy was wilder, but also more effective than when he whipped the Yankees in the second game of last Tuesday's doubleheader. He was in serious trouble only once, in the sixth, when the Yankees filled the bases with two out on a pair of passes and a single by Jack Saltzgaver. Rowe fanned Bill Dickey to close this critical frame, besides striking out Babe Ruth, pinch hitting in the eighth for Ben Chapman, and whiffing the mighty Lou Gehrig in the ninth. Rowe struck out everybody who faced him except Saltzgaver and George Selkirk, the recruit outfielder.

Fourth Over Yanks.

This was Rowe's fourth victory over the Yankees since he began his winning streak and his eighteenth of the entire season, but he had a narrow escape from serious injury when he caught his foot in the bag while running to third in the second inning. The big youngster went down like a log, twisting his left ankle and rolled in apparent agony while the players rushed up to him. It looked as if he was through for the day but after first aid treatement and a rest he hobbled back into action and soon shook off the effects of the mishap.

The accident occurred in the midst of the winning Tiger rally off Jimmy Deshong, young right-hander of the Yankees. With one out, Deshong hit Marvin Owen in the side with a pitched ball and Pete Fox then tripled down the leftfield line to bring home the first run. Rowe scratched an infield hit, while Fox held third. Manager Cochrane came through with a

British Girls Are Routed In Tennis

Palfrey and Babcock End Foreign Threat in 3-Set Matches.

Jacobs Shows Return to Form, Wins, 6-0, 6-1; Baroness Bows.

FOREST HILLS, N. Y., Aug. 17 (AP).—Little Sarah Palfrey and Carolin Babcock twisted the British lion's royal tail properly today and repelled England's challenge for the forty-seventh National Women's singles tennis championship.

Lifting their games to great heights against dogged British determination, Miss Palfrey conquered frail Freda James, 6—3, 3—6, 6—1, and Miss Babcock outsteadied and outlugged left-handed Katherine Stammers, 6—3, 2—6, 6—4, before a roaring gallery of 3,000 in the quarter-final round.

While their compatriots eliminated the two survivors of the original British contingent of three, Helen Hull Jacobs, the defending champion, swamped Elizabeth Ryan, the veteran Californian, 6—0, 6—1, and Dorothy Andrus, the Stamford, Conn., millionairess, disposed of Baroness Maude Levi, of Minden, Nev., 6—1, 6—4.

Gallery Is Thrilled.

The Babcock-Stammers match overshadowed the sudden return to form of Helen Jacobs and furnished the galleryites with thrills and excitement such as had not been seen here before this week. Despite the shocking news of serious injuries suffered by her brother in an automobile accident in Los Angeles this morning, which she learned half an hour before the match, Miss Babcock tore mercilessly through the blond Briton's murderous forehand attack.

Although extended to three sets, little Miss Palfrey was never in real danger against Miss James. The Brookline, Mass., girl, a favorite for the title, had too great a variety of shots for the Briton.

Miss Jacobs was right on her toes every minute of her match with Miss Ryan, who could match neither the speed nor youth of the champion. The veteran Californian, who owns up to 40-odd years, was helpless against Miss Jacobs' all-court attack and she looked like somebody trying to swat a fly and missing by more than inches.

Baroness Levi Bows.

Far off the game that enabled her to eliminate Betty Nuthall, of England, in the second round, Baroness Levi hardly made it interesting for Miss Andrus until the second set. Even then her rally couldn't shake the steady Connecticut husky. Miss Andrus' powerful service carried too much fire for the baroness and a was a vital factor in her victory.

In the semifinals tomorrow Miss Andrus will meet Miss Palfrey and Miss Jacobs will engage Miss Babcock. It will be the second meeting in three weeks for the latter pair with Miss Babcock holding a straight-set victory over the champion in the final of the Seabright Invitation Tourney.

Allison Wins From Bell In 5 Sets

Parker Also Gains Finals by Stopping Grant in Newport Play.

NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 17 (AP).—Wilmer Allison and Frankie Parker, two methodical shotmakers who keep banging away at their opponents' weak spots until they break through, today gained the final round of the Newport Casino Singles Tennis Tournament.

Allison, runner-up to Frank Shields here last year, gained his second straight Casino final by wearing down the greatly improved Berkeley Bell, of New York, 6—4, 1—6, 2—6, 7—5, 6—2. Parker entered the last round after giving the new clay court champion, Bryan ("Bitsy") Grant, of Atlanta, a 6—3, 3—6, 6—2, 6—3 trouncing.

Half of the doubles final bracket became occupied after the entire United States Davis Cup Team went into action on the same court. The National champions, George Lott and Lester Stoefen, who gained the only American point in the international final against the British, had little difficulty turning back Shields and Sidney Wood, who divided the Davis Cup singles assignments, in straight sets, 6—4, 9—7, 6—3.

Allison-Van Ryn Win.

In the only other match on the card, Allison and his perennial partner, Johnny Van Ryn, of Philadelphia, qualified for a semifinal match against Bell and Gregory Mangin, of Newark, by defeating the Californian youngsters, Gene Mako, new National junior titlist, and red-haired Donald Budge, 3—6, 6—1, 6—3.

A's Win First, 9-8; Chisox, Second, 3-2

Philadelphia, Aug. 17 (AP).—The Philadelphia Athletics and Chicago White Sox divided a double-header today, the Mackmen winning the first game, 9 to 8, in ten innings for their sixth straight victory and losing the second, 3 to 2.

Giants Win Pair To Stretch Lead

Rout Pirates, 7-3, 8-3; Ott in Hero Role.

Pittsburgh, Aug. 17 (AP).—The Giants took a couple of long strides toward the National League pennant today, when they subdued the Pirates in both ends of a doubleheader, 7 to 3 and 8 to 3. The double triumph, coupled with Chicago's loss to Boston, gave the Giants a 5½-game lead.

Roy Parmelee and Carl Hubbell gave the league leaders some superb, but spotty, pitching. Parmelee pitched no-hit ball up to the eighth, then the Pirates began to combine hits with the walks he had been issuing all the way and he had to be removed for Al Smith after three runs had come in on as many blows. Hubbell gave ten hits, but was able to record his eighteenth victory and his twentieth complete game as his mates backed him with an 18-hit assault on three pitchers.

Mel Ott made a big contribution by hitting a home run with two on base in each game to bring his season's total up to 32.

Kid Chocolate Wins by K. O. In Seventh

4,100 See Sarilla Beaten; Ex-Champion's Flare, However, Is Gone.

By Bill McCormick.

KID CHOCOLATE, the Cuban bon bon, who melted under the relentless heat of the bright lights of Broadway and Harlem, dragged the ebony hulk that once housed the greatest fighting machine of modern times into the ring at Griffith Stadium last night to score a seventh round knockout over Andre Sarilla, a lunmbering, awkward southpaw who wouldn't have lasted seven seconds with the mighty black atom of yore.

Some 4,100 highly enthusiastic spectators were electrified by Chocolate's performance, which might have done credit to any but a once truly great fighter. Gone was the temper from the rapier left that once scintillated like the sword of D'Artagnan. Gone was the edge from the right hand that once bit like a Damascus blade. All that remained was a semblance of the once remarkable speed and ring generalship—and that was enough to electrify the assemblage, most of whom had turned out fully expecting to be electrified.

Evades Foe's Rushes.

Throughout six rounds and 1 minute and 57 seconds of the seventh, the Chocolate Drop cleverly evaded the Panama puncher's bull-like lunges, countering with neatness and precision, then setting a fast pace in spurts.

He slapped the Panamaic from all angles with long, sweeping

Paul Back, But Dizzy Seeks Aid of Landis

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 17 (AP).—Paul, the silent half of the pitching Deans, returned to the good graces of the Cardinals today, but loquacious Dizzy remained outside the fold.

Paul donned his uniform after signing a statement saying he regretted his "unfortunate misunderstanding" with Manager Frankie Frisch. At the time, Brother Dizzy was in Chicago, where he enlisted the aid of baseball's high commissioner, Kenesaw Mountain Landis, in shooting out his troubles with Frisch.

The return of Paul was interpreted as meaning Dizzy can come back whenever he promises to be good.

"I know I was in the wrong when I refused to go to Detroit and again when I refused to go on the field when asked to do so by Manager Frisch," Paul said in his statement, as released by Sam Breadon, Cardinal president.

For not going to Detroit for an exhibition game Monday, Paul was fined $50 and Dizzy $100. Both were suspended indefinitely when they balked at putting on their uniforms when Frisch told them of the fines.

Although Breadon and other Cardinal officials have announced they were backing Frisch 100 per cent in his controversy with the Deans, Branch Rickey, vice president of the club, said today no announcement will be made during the season as to who will manage the club in 1935.

"That does not mean that Frisch will be replaced and it does not mean that he will be reappointed," Rickey said. "It merely means the club had adopted a policy to make no more announcements about managers during a season."

Landis to Enter Case.

Chicago, Aug. 17 (AP).—Baseball Commissioner Kenesaw Mountain Landis will officially get into the case of Dizzy Dean versus the St. Louis Cardinals, in a hearing at St. Louis Monday.

Dizzy called on the commissioner this morning, and after learning that the hearing would be held, took Mrs. Dean to the Cubs' game with the Boston Braves.

Landis had nothing to say, other than that he would hear both sides of the case at St. Louis. Dean, however, took time out from autographing scorecards to say that he was confident he will be back in good standing after Landis hears the case.

"Nothing will be done until Monday," Dizzy said. "Judge Landis has promised he will go to St. Louis Monday. I am sure that as soon as he hears the facts, he will force the Cardinals to put us back in uniform."

The "us" indicated Dizzy did not know his brother Paul had made peace with the Cardinals.

Dodgers Swamp Reds In Series Finale, 12-4

Cincinnati, Aug. 17 (AP).—The Brooklyn Dodgers clouted the Reds into a semblance of submission today to win the series finale, 12 to 4.

The Dodgers knocked Larry Benton out in the fourth, got a couple of blows off Ted Kleinhans in the same inning and finished against Ray Kolp, getting 14 blows in all. They piled up eight runs in the first four frames. The Reds tossed in three costly errors.

League Pitcher Blanks Foe for 25 2-3 Innings

Cumberland, Md., Aug. 17 (Spl.). Jim Stevenson, leading pitcher of the Interstate League, not satisfied with winning the majority of his games by a run or two, has records showing that in the last three games in which he has appeared the big P. E. right-hander has dealt out nothing but blanks to the opposition over a stretch of 25⅔ innings.

The last team to score on Scotty was Celanese, and that was in the sixth inning of a ten-inning game, which Stevenson won by the score of 3 to 2 on July 22. He finished the game by hurling four scoreless innings, blanked Frostburg, 1 to 0, in nine frames on July 29, pitched scoreless ball for 3⅓ innings as relief pitcher at Centerville, August 5, and handed the Baltimore & Ohio nine goose eggs last week.

Pearson Gives 4 Bingles but Bows to Burke; Manush Fails.

By Lewis F. Atchison.

THE answer to what's wrong with the Washington pitching staff was supplied yesterday by willowy Robert Burke and the Earl of Whitehill, a couple of gents holding memberships in the mound corps, who scribbled curves at the Indians until they were scarcely recognizable as occupants of the first division.

The Earl snapped Washington's losing streak with a ten-h

Adobe Post Leads All Way to Score in Narragansett Feature and Pay $18.70

5-Year-Old Two-Length Winner

Redress Is Second and Caracao, 3-2 Choice, Finishes Third.

PAWTUCKET, R. I., Aug. 17 (AP).—Adobe Post, a consistent 5-year-old plater owned and trained by H. H. Brown, surprised the talent today by whipping four other claimers in the 1 1-6 miles fifth event, which topped the Narragansett card.

Taking the lead after the first few strides, the gelded son of Cherokee whirled along in front all the way, passing the judges two lengths in front of C. V. Whitney's Redress, the well-played second choice. Curacao, the 3-to-2 favorite, from Mrs. Payne Whitney's Greentree Stable, again failed his backers, losing the place by 2½ lengths.

With Louis Chanove in the saddle, Adobe Post ran the distance over a good track in 1:47 2-5, only 1 2-5 seconds off the course record. He paid $18.70 for $2.

Kievex Triumphs.

Saratoga Springs, Aug. 17 (AP).—W. Graham's Kievex, which recently defeated Bazaar in the Saranac, came right back to record an easy triumph in the 1 mile of the Delaware Handicap here today. The gelded son of Kiev had a length and a half to spare over S. L. Burch's Thursday. The Wheatley Stable's Dark Secret, returning from Narragansett, lost the place by a half length. J. H. Louchheim's Economic was fourth and last, pulling up decidedly lame. Kievex, favorite at 8 to 5, picked up $3,050 for his trip around the track. The track was muddy.

At the Post . . .

with Bill Bennings.

Narragansett, July 17.

Dear Al:

My Laurel friend who reads the Bennings selections to eliminate those horses from consideration must be rolling in wealth these days. But I sincerely hope that those of the firm's followers who get down on the line occasionally are on vacations, for I can't remember a Bennings slump of the proportions of the present one. We took a beating down the line today and I have no alibis. However, I do believe there should be a Congressional investigation of Adobe Post after that form reversal today. His handlers used the hot and cold method to get an $18.70 mutuel, and from the silence that fell over the park when he came home, I have a feeling that only the wise money was invested. I had a winner today in Reigh Rose, but the dog was disqualified. I can't blame it on Clocker Mike because I wouldn't let him come close to the track today. I believe I'll hide under the stands tomorrow and see if I can't change the luck.

BILL.

First race—Tutticurio seems the best suited of the juveniles named to contest in the opener. Schaffer should get this one away winging and I expect every post to be a winning one. Color Bearer deserves second mention. Clocker Mike leans toward Gay Blade despite that failure last out.

Second race—Old Baldy and Polyfon will battle it out for the main award here, accordnig to the Bennings books. Both are fit as hands can make them. Jaz Age will take care of the third money and will move up if the top fellows make any mistakes.

Third race—Chain showed a nice sprint effort today and if sent back at this mile I look for an upset. A cheap one at best, but the off track moves him up. Brown Wisdom is the one to beat and the probable favorite. Bright Bird may stumble into the show award.

Fourth race—Periodical gets another chance. This one was being whispered around the paddock late today and I'm stringing along. Plumage and Prince Abbott to complete the money picture. Manager Bill, the famous in and outer, could awake again here.

Fifth race—I'm going to try to throw the hooks into this field and chase Khorasan home ahead of the flock. The veteran has a race in his system once in a while and I understand tomorrow is the day of days. Barn Swallow, Teralice and Watch Him are the best of the others.

Sixth race—Fort Springs is my special in the feature. However, this one must have a tough track. If the course speeds up, I look for Nellie Flag, Albuquerque and Currants to fight it out.

Seventh race—Crazy Jane, The Pelican and Cantersine to finish in the order named.

Eighth race—Fabius, Pennywise and Vested Power to complete the money bracket in the finale.

Rainbow Wins Over Yankee 2d Time

Triumphs After Change in Wind Forces Rival to Give Up Lead.

NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 17 (AP).—Rainbow, Harold S. Vanderbilt's aspirant for the defense of the America's Cup, today won the historic King's Cup and scored her second victory over Yankee of Boston, the leading candidate for defense honors, skippered by Charles Francis Adams, former Navy Secretary.

Actually, Yankee finished third on corrected time, although she was second at the finish line. Weetamoe took second place and Vanitie, Gerard Lambert's old and ineligible cup boat, came in fourth.

Today's course was intended to be a 15-mile run to the Clay Head whistler and a 15-mile beat back to the finish line. However, soon after the contest started, the wind hauled from the north to the southwest, giving the contestants a reach. The change in the breeze found Yankee far to leeward, although she had been in the lead. It was a disadvantage she was unable to overcome, by nearly 3 minutes.

Today's race ended the sailing contests held in connection with the annual cruise of the New York Yacht Club. Seven races were sailed. Yankee took three, Weetamoe and Rainbow two each.

All the cup candidates began intensive preparations for the final trials which begin Wednesday for the selection of a defender to meet Tom Sopwith's British challenger, Endeavour.

Hogan to Fight Matan Here On Aug. 27

Will Seek to Repeat His Victory Registered on Baer Title Card.

EDDIE HOGAN, 21-year-old heavyweight sensation, who recently was taken under the managerial wing of Billy Duffy, comanager of Primo Carnera, will make his Washington debut on August 27 in an eight-round semi-final against Chester Matan on the Griffith Stadium card headed by Pete Sarron and Benny Bass.

Hogan defeated Matan in a preliminary to the Carnera-Baer card in New York, but was unable to rock the rugged New York heavyweight into slumberland as he has six of the nine professionals he has fought and defeated in his short career.

Hogan has been declared by no less an authority than Tommy Loughran to be the finest heavyweight prospect he has seen on the fistic horizon. The youngster aided Loughran in training for Primo Carnera last winter, and it was in these workouts that he attracted the admiration of Duffy, who scouted Loughran's workouts for his fighter, Carnera.

Hogan's best weapon is a scintillating left hand, with which he jabs, hooks and straight-punches very effectively. His right, too, is laden with potential dynamite, but he prefers to maneuver with his left most of the time, holding the right in abeyance for the finishing touches.

Buddy Baer in Training.

San Francisco, Aug. 17 (U.P.).—Buddy Baer, the 250-pound "little" brother of Max Baer, world heavyweight champion, started training today for a boxing campaign he hopes will keep the heavyweight title in the Baer family after Max retires.

CARDAMON worked her way up gradually, made a determined bid to reach the leader, but weakened slightly through the stretch. HOT GRIDDLE, under steadying restraint while improving her position, closed with good energy through the stretch. SUNDROPS, well placed for the first three furlongs, faltered thereafter. DONNA TUTTI had brief early speed. DAWN FLIGHT was unable to reach the leaders. ANN CAPRA was outrun throughout.

HASTY BELLE, rushed into contention in the opening furlong, wore down CHAIN when reaching the stretch and drew out steadily through the furlong. MEROVECH, drifted back at the start, worked his way up gradually, came to the outside in the stretch and, while unable to reach the winner, was up to take the place in the concluding stride. CHAIN, hustled through on the inside in the first sixteenth, drew clear nearing the far turn, but weakened in the last three-sixteenths. LERACK closed willingly, though failing to cut any serious figure in the running. ROUND O, weakened after showing speed for the first three-sixteenths. KAI FINN could never get to the leaders. Two-dollar mutuels paid—ALCORAH, $35.60, $18.30, $10.40; PORTFOLIO, $5.40, $4.20; GUIDING LIGHT, $4.70.

REIGH ROSE took command at once, drew clear straightening out on the back stretch, but carried ALCORAH out all through the closing furlong, finishing out near the judges' stand, for which ALCORAH, trained early, moved up stoutly approaching the stretch, but was carried out by REIGH ROSE all the last eighth of a mile. PORTFOLIO, restrained early, closed with good energy through the stretch while on the inside. GUIDING LIGHT, well placed from the start, weakened slightly in the closing furlong. HORATIO HUGH came with a rush through the stretch, but weakened after forcing the pace for the first half-mile. EMPLOYMENT stumbled at the start and was outrun.

FOURTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 2-year-olds. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 4:01½. Off at 4:05. Winner, H. H. Brown's b. f. Two-dollar mutuels paid—HAPPY HELEN, $12.10, $2.70, $2.50; MORNING MAIL, $2.40, $2.30; NEW FLAG, $2.70.

HAPPY HELEN, restrained while following the pace for the first three furlongs, responded gamely to hard urging through the stretch when taken outside the leader, and was up in the last stride. MORNING MAIL moved through on the inside in the opening quarter-mile and assumed command in the stretch and, despite fighting it out determinedly, just failed to last. NEW FLAG drew into a good lead in the initial quarter-mile, but appeared to stumble after rounding the far turn, recovered gamely, but was unable to keep pace in the closing test. INDIAN NEWS went evenly. RACE CRAFT was never a factor. DANCING QUEEN tired after going the first quarter-mile.

FIFTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,200; claiming. The Fair Haven. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won easily; place, same. Winner, H. H. Brown's ch. g. (5), by Cherokee—Ruth S. ADOBE POST gained a slight advantage straightening out on the back stretch, drew away into a good lead, was rated along in front under steadying restraint and drew out again in the last furlong. REDRESS moved up gradually in the last half-mile, closed gamely, but was unable to reach the winner. CURACAO, a forward factor from the beginning, weakened in the last furlong. SOURCE CIRCLE was going gamely at the finish. BITTYBIT, on the outside throughout, made a bold effort to reach the leaders leaving the back stretch, moved up briefly and dropped back.

SIXTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 4:56. Off at 4:58. Winner, James Arthur's br. h. JAMBALAYA, prominently placed from the outset, moved up fast through the back stretch, wore down BABOO for the lead, drew clear and, hard ridden through the stretch, held PORTCODINE safe. The latter slow to settle in his best stride, moved up fast on the outside after leaving the back stretch, responded gamely to punishment in the stretch and continued determinedly to the end. CALOME went into contention on the outside after going the first half-mile made a game bid through the final furlong, and was going well at the close. SARSITA worked his way up steadily, but weakened slightly in the closing three-sixteenths. BARCELONA PETE bothered us three furlongs on the inside at the stretch turn when the leaders went wide, but was unable to improve his position thereafter. BABOO had good early speed, but weakened badly. EASY BID and FURFUR faltered after displaying brief early speed.

REPEAL took the lead at once, drew clear in the run to the first turn, withstood a challenge from LAST BID at the half-mile ground, drew away again, and held the latter safe through the stretch. LAST BID followed in nearest attendance of the pace from the beginning, made repeated efforts to get to the leader, but was not good enough, though holding on gamely to the finish. INFILEE moved up on the outside at the far turn, continued determinedly to the end, but was unable to reach the first two, despite being placed under punishment. BIG GRASS, under intermittent punishment throughout, went evenly. LIGHT BREEZE made up some ground after trailing for the opening six furlongs. BLACK PATRICIA, well placed, saved ground at the last turn, but faltered through the stretch run.

Welsh Survives as Mitchell and McElvenny Bow in National Public Parks Play

Capital Pair Defeated by Rallies

Simons and Drewes in Victories After Trailing by 2 to 1.

Rockville Ace Reaches Semifinals; Wins in Three Sets.

MINNEAPOLIS, Aug. 17 (AP).—A couple of spectacular, story-book finishes eliminated two of the three crack entries from Washington, D. C., in the quarter-finals of the National Public Parks tennis championships here today, but the Capital's hard-hitting champion, 23-year-old Barney Welsh, of Rockville, continued his straight-set system of progress to gain the semifinals.

Arnold Simons, of Louisville, the defending champion, defeated Dooley Mitchell, five-times Washington titleholder, 4—6, 4—6, 8—6, 6—3, 6—4, after being down 3—5 in the third set, and Ted Drewes, of St. Louis, four-times National champion, downed Ralph McElvenny, husky Government lawyer, 2—6, 10—8, 2—6, 6—3, 7—5, after trailing 3—5 in the final set.

Welsh Wins Thriller.

Welsh bombarded Jess Millman, of Los Angeles, off the court, 6—3, 10—8, 8—6, to make himself the favorite over Drewes in the semifinal tomorrow.

Billy Schommer, Minneapolis City and Northwest champion, became the fourth semifinals as he won from Walter Smigel, of Cleveland, 6—1, 6—1, 6—3. Schommer, like Welsh, has yet to lose a set in the tournament.

Welsh and McElvenny reached the finals of the doubles, winning from Leo Kronman and Rafael Peckoff, of Buaffio, 6—8, 6—3, 6—4, 6—4. Schommer and Charles Britzius, 1933 champions, gained the last round with a 6—8, 6—3, 6—4, 6—1 over Bob Norton and Ted Heuerman, of St. Louis.

Simons' victory over Mitchell probably was the most sensational in the history of the tournament. The sturdy Louisville bridegroom of a week appeared so badly beaten that the crowd left the match, conceding Mitchell victory and moved to another court to watch the doubles champions in action.

At 3—5 in the third chapter, Simons, who had been playing listlessly, started his remarkable spurt with only a handful of spectators looking on. Mitchell's placements, heretofore steady, became wide and long and he seemed to lose heart. He managed to take a 2—0 lead in the last set only to fade out as the Louisville fighter came back with a heady, change-of-pace game which carried him to triumph. Mitchell was seeded sixth.

McElvenny's defeat was almost as heart-breaking a loss as Mitchell's. The former Stanford ace and one-time National intercollegiate doubles champion, who had eliminated Scott Rexinger, one-time Big Ten champion, seeded No. 7, in straight sets, Wednesday, carried the offensive almost from start to finish.

Starts With Rush.

He was volleying with deadly effect for clean placements, but now and then struck costly lapses of form. In the second set, games went with service until 4-all when the Missourian took the lead at 5—4 and 6—5 only to have the unseeded Washington player fight off the challenge. Drewes hung on, however, and finally pulled out the set to even the score after McElvenny had fought off set-point at 6—5.

Drewes appeared tired in the third set and his opponent ran up a 4-1 lead and ran it out for 6—2 as the intermission came. The St. Louis veteran seemed refreshed by the 10-minute rest and ran McElvenny ragged with a drop-shot attack, winning the fourth set by taking Ralph's service at 5—3.

McElvenny rolled up a 5—3 lead in the final chapter, but Drewes took four straight games for the match as his opponent suddenly cracked wide open. Both players were groggy from the long grind, which lasted three hours and five minutes.

In the women's play, Mrs. Ruth Prosser, of St. Louis, the defending champion, eliminated Louise Hoffmeister, of Chicago, 6—2, 6—2, to gain the final round. She meets Katharine Rose, of Cleveland, for the championship.

P. Dean Stars As Phils Bow To Cards

Allows 4 Hits in Relief Role and Is Credited With 12-2 Win.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 17 (AP).—Paul Dean, reinstated today after being fined and suspended, came to the rescue of the Cardinals, held the Phillies to four hits in seven innings and was credited with a 12-to-2 victory.

Jim Mooney, who started in the Red Bird pitching box, was wild and ineffective, and was derricked in the first after 2 runs were scored. Dazzy Vance succeeded him but was removed in the second in favor of a pinch hitter.

Browns, Sox Split; 2 Hits Off Ferrell

St. Louis Wins Second, 5-2, After Losing, 6-0.

Boston, Aug. 17 (AP).—George Blaeholder pitched the Browns to a 5-to-2 victory in the second game of a twin bill today after Wes Ferrell hung up his eleventh win of the season for the Boston Red Sox by limiting the Browns to two hits for a 6-to-0 victory in the opener.

The lanky Sox star's performance was marred only by West's scratch infield single in the fourth and Campbell's Texas leaguer in the fifth. Ferrell walked only two men in the nine innings.

Frederick Nine Facing Test; Near Flag

Can Virtually Clinch Issue With Triumph Today Over Union Bridge.

FREDERICK, Md., Aug. 17 (Spl.).—Interest in the pennant race in the county league centers on the game between Frederick and Union Bridge at McCurdy Field tomorrow. Victory would virtually clinch the title for Frederick, while a triumph for Union Bridge would deadlock the issue and call for an extra game or an extra series.

Frederick stands at the top, one game removed from Union Bridge. Both teams have two scheduled games to play before the close of the season. Frederick will meet Brunswick at McCurdy Field on August 25, while Union Bridge will play at Thurmont the same day. On September 1 the local team will play at Thurmont and on Labor Day Union Bridge will conclude the season at Brunswick.

Brunswick, winner of four successive pennants, is in sixth position, having won four and lost six games. Frederick has a record of nine victories and two defeats, and Union Bridge has won eight games and lost three. Thurmont is third, one game removed from Brunswick; Middletown, fourth; New Windsor, fifth; Brunswick, sixth; Taneytown, seventh, and Woodsboro, eighth. Tomorrow's schedule:

Union Bridge at Frederick, Woodsboro at New Windsor, Thurmont at Brunswick and Middletown at Taneytown.

Tigers Divide

pinch single to tally Fox, after White had flied out, and it was while racing to third that the schoolboy took his tumble.

Deshong Recovers.

The Tigers were unable to do a thing subsequently with Deshong, who got over his wildness and held Detroit to only five hits all told in the eight innings he worked. Johnny Murphy pitched the ninth and set the Bengals down in order for the fifth frame in a row.

Gomez yielded eight hits to Sorrel's six in the first game but the southpaw, in scoring his twentieth victory of the year, was highly effective in the clutches and aided by two double plays in addition to sensational support from Babe Ruth. The Bambino came pounding into right-center in the sixth to make a circus catch of Charley Gehringer's line drive and rob the Tiger second sacker of an extra base hit. Ruth turned a complete somersault after getting his hands on the ball and got an ovation such as he hasn't known in a long time.

The Yankees, meanwhile, made good use of their opportunities. They tallied three times on four hits and a walk in the first inning, Gehrig driving in one run and Selkirk two more. Tony Lazzeri completed the scoring with a home run wallop into left-field stands in the sixth after Selkirk walked.

Allen, Broida Gain Final at Oakland

Clash Today for Net Title; Mrs. Turney Beaten by Miss Grimes.

OAKLAND, Md., Aug. 17 (Spl.).—Play was resumed in the Western Maryland Tennis Tournament today, although heavy rains kept the courts flooded all day yesterday. Elimination of mixed doubles competition will enable the tournament to reach the finals tomorrow in men's and women's singles and men's doubles on scheduled time.

In the feature match today, Jimmy Allen, Charleston dark horse entry, who has figured in the upset of two seeded players in the early stages of the men's singles, was beaten by Bobby Madden, 17-year-old Pittsburgher, 6—4, 4—6, 6—2, 4—6, 6—3.

Frank Broida, defending titlist, also entered the finals of the men's singles, making an all-Pittsburgh match. Broida beat Elmer Rudy, Baltimore.

Mrs. Turney Bows.

Mrs. Bobsy Turney, Washington, in the only women's match that was played today, was defeated, 6—1, 9—7, by Frances Grimes, Morgantown, W. Va., seeded No. 1 player. The match had been halted by rain on Wednesday with Mrs. Turney leading in the second set, 6—5, and rapidly gaining. She managed to break Miss Grimes' service after losing the twelfth game of the set, but was unable to continue the pace.

Men's doubles play advanced to the semifinal stage with seeded teams having little difficulty. The semifinals will be held tomorrow morning, leaving an all-final card for the afternoon.

Men's Singles, Semifinals.

Frank Broida, Pittsburgh, defeated Elmer Rudy, Baltimore, 6—0, 1—6, 4—6, 6—1, 6—1.

Braves Down Cubs; Klein, Jurges Back

McManus Hits With 3 On to Give 5-2 Victory.

Chicago, Aug. 17 (AP).—Even the return of Chuck Klein and Bill Jurges to the starting line-up after long illness absences couldn't thwart their Boston jinx and the Cubs were defeated again by the Braves today, 5 to 2.

A pinch single with the bases filled by Marty McManus featured a four-run Boston rally against big Jim Weaver in the seventh inning that wiped out a 2 to 1 Cub lead. The pinch blow scored the tying and winning runs.

Neither Jurges, who returned to the strating line-up for the first time since his appendicitis operation June 28, nor Chuck Klein, who had been sidelined two weeks with a charley horse, got a hit.

leading hitter at 12:45 p. m., got only one, and in the second game he got none at all.

One of Cleveland's outstanding performers in the inaugural was Morris Berg, a catcher, who was shooed off the premises by Mr. Griffith when his baseball family outgrew the limits prescribed by law. Moe, as some of the boys call him, never rated up in the leading five hitters, but he smacked two on the nose yesterday that had more than "umph" behind them.

Triples in Ninth.

His first hit was a double in the fourth, which was wasted, but that second was a ninth-inning liner to right that knocked down three bases. It represented the Tribe's third run for Pytlak, running for Moe, scored on Galatzer's single.

Cleveland got its first two runs on singles by Hale and Kamm and a surprise two-bagger by Skinny Hildebrand. Between the second and ninth innings, however, Mr. Whitehill was teasing the visitors along with a hit here and there, but cracking down when in warm, even lukewarm water.

Chester River Regatta Off Slowly

Four Races Are Contested on Opening Day of Two-Day Event.

CHESTERTOWN, Md., Aug. 17 (Spl.).—With only a light breeze stirring and with yesterday's stormy weather keeping many boats away, sailing events of the first day of the two-day annual Chester River Yacht Club regatta got away to a slow start today.

Late in the afternoon the sun came out and a stronger wind churned the ebb tide as boats began to cross the finish line.

A large number of motor boat entries have been received for tomorrow's events beginning at 9 a. m.

Four races were on the program at one time today. International star class yachts finished first, with the Red Jacket, piloted by J. H. Gibson, of the Chesapeake Bay Yacht Club, well in the lead. From the start a battle was in progress between Patsy Raskob, daughter of John J. Raskob, and a well-known skipper of star boats, and her sister, Nina, piloting the Whistler for third place. Patsy Raskob's Ripple was nosed out by a slight margin.

The Anne Is First.

The Barnegat sneak box event, with eight entries, resolved itself into a battle royal, judges finally giving the decision to The Anne, with W. Clark Greib, jr., as skipper. There were four entries each in the sailing scows and batteau classes won, respectively, by the Snapdragon, J. Kellogg Smith, The Wizzard and Dorsey Hines, both of Chestertown.

Star class; two laps, 7 miles—Won by Red Jacket, J. Hammond Gibson, Chesapeake Bay Yacht Club; second, Mondra, Dr. H. H. Wilmer, Centreville; third, Miss Nina Raskob, Centreville. Time of winning boat, 2h. 37m.

Barnegat sneak boxes; one lap, 3½ miles—Won by Anne, W. G. Grieb, jr., Chestertown; second, Albatross, Henry B. Wilmer, jr.; third, Alice, Harry W. Wood, Centreville. Time, 2h.

Stocks Drift TowardSlightly Lower Levels

Market Movements Turn Mixed; Trading Falls to 447,030 Shares.

New York, Aug. 17 (AP).—Speculative markets remained in a rut today.

Movements in the share market were mixed, with the main drift toward slightly lower levels.

Speculation marked time while traders waited for an incentive to renewal of activity and some definite indication of autumn business prospects.

Transfers Decline.

Transfers of stocks decreased to 447,030 shares, the smallest for a full session since July 9, compared with 610,120 yesterday. The Standard Statistics Company average for 90 stocks dipped four-tenths of a point to 71.9.

The inflation scare that contributed to recent liquidation of bonds seemed to have passed as a major influence in financial markets and Wall Street turned to a study of business statistics for guidance on nearby trends.

Fresh weakness in the dollar, while it stimulated a little early buying in non-ferrous metal stocks, did not revive the recent inflation talk for it was coupled with reports of United States Treasury buying of silver abroad, rather than any new monetary moves in Washington.

Indvidual issues contributed a few sizable gains to the share list. Fertilizer stocks were strong on the favorable earnings report turned in by American Agricultural Chemical and belief that the crop situation would encourage relatively active buying of fertilizers by farmers.

American Agricultural Chemical expanded its previous gains by more than 2 points, rising to a new 1934 high above 38. Virginia Carolina Chemical $7 preferred spurted 10 points on small transactions. International Agricultural rose 5 points.

Some Scattered Selling.

There was more scattered buying of building and allied shares on hopes of the Government's home renovation campaign would succeed in expanding the demand for building materials. Devoe & Raynolds "A," U. S. Gypsum and Congoleum were firm. National Lead was bid up 6¾ points on a transfer of 100 shares.

Losses of fractions to 3 points were recorded for Allied Chemical, American Can, American Telephone, Santa Fe, Du Pont, Chrysler, American Smelting, U. S. Smelting and other prominent issues.

Commercial Investment Trust encountered profit-taking and closed fractionally lower following announcement of a 25 per cent stock dividend on the common. Armour of Illinois preferred moved up a point on the declaration of an initial quarterly dividend of $1.50 on the new $6 prior preferred.

No pickup in industrial operations was evident in the day's news, however. Cram's reports estimated automobile production this week, following the seasonal trend, had decreased 3,685 units. Output was estimated at 53,854 units, compared with 53,920 units in the corresponding week a year ago.

Robey's Review

Finance Economics Business

Retirement of Mr. Black as Governor of the Federal Reserve Board May Well Mean Further Weakening of System.

By Ralph West Robey.

Retirement of Mr. Eugene Black as governor of the Federal Reserve Board unquestionably would be viewed with far more concern if it had not been the subject of rumors for many months. His withdrawal may well prove to be another milestone in the debilitation of our central banking system. This all depends upon his successor. On the basis of the record it is not probable that he will be even as strong a defender of sound banking principles as Mr. Black has been. For, by and large, each of the appointments to the Reserve Board by Mr. Roosevelt has been weaker than the preceding one.

All told, the President has made six appointments to the board, including the ex-officio members. They have been Mr. Wooden, followed by Mr. Morgenthau; Mr. O'Connor, the Comptroller of the Currency; Mr. Black, Mr. Thomas and Mr. Szymczak. The term of office of Mr. Miller, one of the three others, also has expired, and consequently offers another vacancy to be filled by some one more closely in harmony with the President's views if it is so desired.

Requirements for Membership Make Playing Politics Easy.

The statutory requirements for eligibility to the Reserve Board are extraordinarily simple. For all practical purposes the only one of compelling importance is that not one member may be from any one Federal Reserve district. There is no provision regarding political affiliations, as is sometimes found in the laws establishing such organizations. The reason for this omission is that at the time the Federal reserve act was under consideration, in 1913, it was the expectation that the board would be the "supreme court of finance" and hence that appointments to it would be made on the basis of ability rather than political affiliations.

In the first board this theory was carried out, President Wilson selecting a group that, while necessarily inexperienced in central banking, embodied real strength. Recently, however, politics has come to play a more and more important part, the appointment of a "strong man" experienced in banking and finance being the exception rather than the rule. Under Mr. Roosevelt it appears that there no longer is any attention given to other than political considerations. At present the board has nothing but Democrats on it.

Democrats Have No Corner On Ignorance of Banking.

Of course this, in itself, does not mean that the board must be "weak." There are just as many Republicans as Democrats that are quite innocent of any knowledge of the function of central banking. There is no necessary reason, therefore, why we should not have a good Federal Reserve Board regardless of whether if is all Democrats or all Republicans. The fact remains, nevertheless, that the present board is not strong. All things considered, it perhaps is the weakest board in the history of the reserve system.

This means that the retirement of Mr. Black is a real loss. During his term as governor, it is true, the reserve system has been reduced to the status of little more than a glorified division of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. Nevertheless, he, at times, has had the courage to take exception to some of the unsound policies being pursued by the Administration. His objection has not been strong, and it has been futile, but at least it was expressed. The record provides little evidence for believing that his successor will show even this much independence.

Foreign Markets.

London, Aug. 17 (AP).—With a fair business being transacted, a cheerful tone was recorded on the stock exchange today. British funds, industrials, Transatlantic issues, oil, and rubber shares improved, while other sections were reactionary. The market closed steady.

Paris—Only gold mining issues registered an improvement in the quiet session on the Bourse today. While the dollar closed 3½ centimes below yesterday's closing price as a result of New York selling orders, American issues remained unchanged. The closing was firm.

Berlin—Despite the minimum business done, prices on the Boerse were slightly higher today, brewery shares being preferred. Gains, however, were lost later, and the closing was weaker.

Goods Markets.

New York, Aug. 17 (AP).—Cotton goods were firm and quiet today. Threat of a general strike of textile workers caused no anxiety. Rayon cloth sales were slightly better. Yarns moved slowly. Interest in tropical sulfines for spring broadened and some contracts have been closed. Silk goods were in moderate demand. Burlaps were quiet.

U. S. Treasury Receipts.

(Associated Press.)

The position of the Treasury on August 15 was:

Receipts, $23,526,964.88; expenditures, $135,028,015.36; balance, $2,360,363,217.06; customs receipts for the month, $10,215,-359.71.

Receipts for the fiscal year (since July 1), $385,858,189.96; expenditures, $724,-413,247.86 (including $361,180,235.55 of emergency expenditures); excess of expenditures, $338,555,077.90; gold assets, $7,979,416,935.11.

Bonds Display Firm Tone; Activity Falls

Government List Steady; Trading Volume Totals $8,450,000.

New York, Aug. 17 (AP).—The firm undertone of the domestic corporate bond market was well maintained in today's trading, although activity dwindled to a more normal turnover. The Government list was again steady.

Transfers aggregated $8,450,000, par value, compared with $9,371,000 on Thursday, and turnover in Governments totaled $2,390,000, against $2,770,000.

The Standard Statistics Co. average of 60 domestic corporate loans advanced two-tenths of a point, to 83.7.

Investment Buying.

Brokers reported continued investment buying, particularly in utilities, some of which came near their highs of the year, and this support enabled the listed market to run counter to a hesitant stock market and generally lower prices for commodities.

Additional advances of one to two points in the lower priced loans embraced some issues of the Alleghany Co., Boston & Maine, Rock Island, Hudson & Manhattan, Kansas City, Fort Scott & Memphis, Interborough Rapid Transit, Otis Steel, Utah Light & Traction and Wabash Railroad. New Haven 3½s of 1934 advanced 4½ points, to 45.

Brooklyn Union Gas 5s gained 1¾ points to 110, a new high for the year. C. & O. General 4½s advanced 2 points to 111, within a fraction of its high, and Southern Bell Telephone 5s were at a new high at 110¼, up 1 point on the day.

Other loans advancing around a point or more, included some obligations of American Telephone, Liggett & Myers, Montana Power, Norfolk & Western, Southwestern Bell Telephone, Union Pacific, and Southern Pacific.

Federal Issues Gain.

Government obligations had easy sailing with some issues gaining as much as 6/32ds. There was some irregularity in Home Owners Loan bonds in midday trading, but investment demand caught up the slack along toward the close and both issues finished steady. Federal Farm Mortgage Loans were slightly higher. Liberty 3½s were about ⅛ lower at 103.15, but the turnover was small.

A feature of the market was the strong demand for South American bonds, influenced, it was stated, by completion of an agreement on the service of Dominican Republica bonds. Higher prices were paid for bonds of Argentina, Chile, Brazil, Colombia and Uruguay. French 7s were 2½ higher at 188½.

Curb Turns Irregular in Late Trading

Few Specialties Advance; Transfers Decline to 106,000 Shares.

New York, Aug. 17 (AP).—Light offerings in the final trading resulted in a moderately irregular close on the Curb Exchange today.

The list opened steady and quietly backed and filled until the late unsettlement. A few specialties continued to move up briskly in thin dealings. Utilities, oils and alcohols ended mixed while metals were fairly steady.

Childs Co. preferred added 3 points to its substantial advances of the two previous sessions. Singer Manufacturing and Pepperell Manufacturing recorded similar gains. Lynch Corporation and Bower Roller Bearing were around 2 higher.

Commonwealth Edison rose 2 to close at 83 but other utilities including American Gas & Electric and Electric Bond & Share yielded moderately. Fractional recessions were shown by Hiram Walker, Swift & Company, Swift International, Gulf Oil, International Petroleum and Greyhound Corporation. Newmont and Standard Oil of Indiana were firmer.

Transfers, which approximated 106,000 shares, were a trifle less than yesterday.

Farm Income Is Estimated At 29.3 Per Cent Above 1933

New York, Aug. 17.—Farm income for the United States is estimated for 1934 by the Standard Statictics Co., of New York, at $8,250,000,000, up 29.3 per cent as compared with 1933, 61 per cent as compared with 1932, 20 per cent as compared with 1931, and a little more than a billion dollars under the $9,414,000,000 total for 1930.

The bases of the forecast are Government estimates of the quantity of production and either recent prices or the average for the year to date, depending upon the method of marketing. To this figure is added the bonus, benefit and relief payments already made and those in prospect during the rest of the year.

The estimate does not take into consideration the possibility of higher prices for farm products, and so may be deemed conservative.

Corn Setbacks Retard Wheat Advancement

Eastern Selling Is Also Apparent as Liquidation Gets Underway.

Chicago, Aug. 17 (AP).—Severe setbacks of corn prices today accompanied Eastern selling that revealed the market was without any aggressive support from buyers, and that started heavy liquidation.

An extreme fall of nearly 4 cents a bushel in corn was witnessed, and many stop-loss orders were forced into execution. Pit observers said that an apparently antagonistic attitude of Washington officials toward speculative operations had a decided tendency to restrain active buying power.

Corn closed nervous, 1½ to 2¾ under yesterday's finish; wheat irregular at 1⅛ decline to ½ advance; oats, ¼ to 1⅛ off, and provisions varying from 10 cents loss to a gain of 5 cents.

Rain Average.

Contributing to acute weakness of the corn market was an authoritative summary showing August rainfall in the corn belt has averaged 114 per cent of normal, the best so far on the crop. An additional bearish influence was an official forecast suggesting further widespread moisture might be received tonight.

Country offerings of corn to arrive were curtailed by the sharp downturn of prices, but shipping inquiry here for corn to go east broadened out considerably.

Wheat and oats prices gave way with corn. Uncertainty over Washington Administration crop plans and about the processing tax influenced wheat selling, and so too did reports of general rains relieving drought conditions in Australia and Argentina. On the other hand, transient rallies were promoted by trade assertions that there was no price inflation in a market where, as in the case of wheat, the futures were selling at 8 cents discount under cash property.

Minneapolis Market.

Much notice, too, was taken that the Minneapolis wheat market continued to display relative strength as compared with Chicago, and at one stage went to 11¼ cents over Chicago September, the widest difference this season.

A peculiar feature of today's grain trading was that barley bucked the general downward trend and sold at a new high price record for the season as well as at a good premium over the choicest grade of hard winter wheat in the Chicago market. Scarcity of barley in the Central West was reported as causing shipments of late from Oregon and California.

Provisions made only a laggard response to fresh upturns of hog values and toward the last was affected by corn weaknes.

White Collar Men.

The men who wore white collars when life was good and gay, who earned all kinds of dollars, and blew the same away; the men who had great riches, it seemed, at their command, are toiling in the ditches, a spade or pick in hand. They never dreamed of seeing that dark and dismal dawn, when folks would see them fleeing to put their hats in pawn. They never dreamed of knowing what famine's truly like, they never dreamed of going along the poorhouse pike. I know some 50 toilers who once had easy tasks, who had their squabs and broilers and vintages in casks; then came the great disaster, the time of sturm and drang, and now they're spreading plaster on someone's cheap shebang. And now they're daily breaking their backs at heavy toil; they're digging, hoeing, raking the harsh and barren soil. They're sweating and they're steaming, down in the woodland glade, where once they lay a-dreaming, filled up with lemonade. And most of them, undaunted talk blithely as they sweat; it's not the job they wanted, but vain is all regret. I met the erstwhile banker, who once was stacking high, the bulwark and the anchor of Bilgetown-on-the-Rye. He only said, "I'm thankful to have some work to do, so I can buy a tankful of spuds and Irish stew." I met the former teacher, who earns each day a buck; he said, "Well, fellow creature, I surely am in luck. So many have no wages, no revenue at all, and I, by easy stages, can gain a bundle small." Oh, brave old human critters, how wonderful you seem! You take the knockout bitters and never raise a scream.
